ST: What are your unfulfilled visions for the town?

WE: I wish I had got industrial lands out in Gormley done. Other than that, unfinished? No, I think everything is fine. I don't think I can do much more. That is one of the reasons I decided that it's time for me to go. I think the Council needs a different leader now. I think it needs someone to come and do things that maybe I don't see.

ST: What is the reason for your electoral success over the years?

WE: I think I'm very personable and I think I know the public in town. I'm a people-person. I like to work with people. I want to listen to them. I want to help if I can. I like to be involved, to see things happen.

ST: What's your most important advice to the next occupant of the mayor's chair?

WE: They have to try to bring their council together. Give all residents and all members of council an opportunity to let them have their say and then bring them all together.

Make sure that you don't lose touch with the people on the street. The residents that put you there still want to understand that you will listen to them at any time and that you would have time for people.

ST: What's your personal vision for the years ahead?

WE: I want to become the regional chair in 2014. That's my goal right now. I'm hoping that I'm going to be successful in that. If I'm not, I'm not sure what my wife and I will do. I think she'd like to see me retire but she knows that I need to be involved, I need to be doing something. But other than if I go to the region, I will not be coming back into politics.

There's life after politics and I will find something. And if I don't, then my wife will have to put up with me.
