Farmer fined for slaughtering goats, sheep without licence

A Stouffville farmer has been fined $12,225 for violating Ontario's food safety laws, the province announced Tuesday.

Akram Wasim pleaded guilty in Newmarket court March 14 to slaughtering goats and sheep without a licence and two other related charges.

Ministry of Natural Resources officers saw Mr. Wasim slaughtering animals in the presence of customers at his farm in 2012.

An investigation revealed he did not have a licence to operate a slaughter facility and there was no inspector present before and after the slaughter - as required by the province.

Mr. Wasim also pleaded guilty to an additional count of slaughtering animals without a licence. The court found he was observed slaughtering animals April 20, 2013 while the first offences were still before the courts, the Ministry of Agriculture said in a media release.
