

Please, play with the art in Latcham Gallery's new show

You won't find any "please don't touch the artwork" signs at the latest Latcham Gallery exhibit.

Rules and Regulations by Toronto-based artist Natalie Quagliotto is a collection of playful sculptures and public signage that encourage visitor participation.

The show opens today with a reception that runs from 7 to 9 p.m. in the gallery. Quagliotto will be in attendance.

The show investigates the division between childhood and adulthood and what it means to play, according to a gallery media release.

The exhibition includes bright yellow repurposed and modified vintage playground equipment.

"Collaboration and ultimately co-operation is required to avoid chaos and possible collision when two willing visitors decide to use either the conjoined swingsets or the merry-go-rounds," stated the media release.

The show is part of the public gallery's NEXT series, which showcases the work of some of Ontario's emerging artists. Each year, Chai Duncan, the gallery's curator, will select an artist, who is on the cusp of breaking through to a wider audience, for a solo show.

There will be an artist talk Sept. 25, 7 p.m. at the gallery.

Rules and Regulations runs until Oct. 25. For more information, go to www.latchamgallery.ca

Prize winners play winery

Canadian Music Competition prize winners will perform at Willow Springs Winery Sept. 21

Among the performers is the 2013 and 2014 grand prize winner, pianist Leonid Nediak.

Among Nediak's accomplishments is an invitation to play at Carnegie Hall in New York City. He has performed with the Toronto Sinfonietta Orchestra and across Canada with orchestras.

Also performing is 13-year-old pianist Coco Ma, who made her Carnegie Hall debut at the age of nine. In 2013, she was selected out of more than 350 applicants to participate in the Lang Lang International Foundation Music Camp in Munich, Germany, for a week, where she studied and performed with Lang Lang. She was one of only 12 students selected and the only Canadian.

Violinist Emma Meinrenken, 14, has four first place prizes from the Canadian Music Competition. She was also the 2012 national finals grand prize winner.

Also performing is Alyssa Curto, who made her Toronto professional stage debut this past year and violinists Rachele, Chantal and Nicole Li.

Admission is $20. For reservations, call 416-519-8520. www.willowspringswinery.ca
