No news on cat killings one year later

BY SANDRA BOLAN
 sbolan@yrmg.com

No new incidents. No new leads. No suspects.

The grizzly discovery of six cat heads in east end Stouffville just over a year ago had pet owners keeping their cats and dogs indoors and left the entire community and police officers wondering why and who would do this.

Despite receiving more than 250 calls and canvassing 1,400 Stouffville homes for information, York Regional Police officers came up empty.

But the case is not closed, even though there have been no other reported incidents of decapitated cats since the last one on Sept. 13, 2013, according to York Regional Police Const. Laura Nicolle.

The first case was reported Aug. 12, 2013.

The heads of six dismembered cats, with no visible blood, were discovered by residents on curbsides in the Tenth Line and Main Street area, with a number of them found near or on Stouffer Street. In every case but one, the heads
