The Timber Pirate.

Have you come in contact yet with another species of Pirate than that found on the high seas? The man who, bent on serving his own interests, makes political appeal to obtain certain choice holdings of timber and, then presto! the man who has a permanent investment in the field finds his choicest fruit taken from beneath his nose. Not content to skim the cream, he leaves the remainder a source of danger from fire to the adjoining timber crops for years. Is there any question of these pseudo settlers ever taking to the land? Investigators say not! In the first place the land is usually strictly forest land, and in the second place the proximity to forests makes the danger from frosts an impossible farming proposition for years to come. The pirates fulfil the minimum requirements required for locating, take out the spoils and say good-bye to the place forever, leaving, as stated before, a fire trap for those whose permanent investment is tied up in the property. Is this honest support of permanent industries? Classification of lands by capable parties would put an end to this menace and would prevent this type of timber mining of our forests. This practice is not confined to the East, but is rampant in the West as well. It brings up the old question of proper classification of lands—an essential step in evolving permanent forest properties where trees would be treated as forest crops, and our forest resources handled for perpetuity.—Canadian Forest and Outdoors.

Further Shipment of Buffalo to North.

During the past summer the Department of the Interior continued the experiment of moving buffalo from the national herd at Wainwright, Alberta, to the great 17,000 square miles of natural feeding grounds known as Wood Buffalo Park near Fort Smith, Northwest Territories. Canada's success in saving the buffalo from extinction is shown by the fact that the national park near Wainwright, which is approximately 15 miles long and 13 miles wide, is not large enough to provide grazing in an average season for a further increase in the herd.

Excepting in a few particulars, the movement was carried out along the same lines as in 1925. The animals were forwarded by rail to Waterways and thence by scow to the unloading point on the Slave river about seventeen miles south of Fitzgerald. Eight trips were required to transport the 1,435 yearlings, 493 two-year olds, and 83 three-year olds selected, and the last consignment left Wainwright on August 16 reaching its destination a week later. The entire operations were carried out with only a comparatively few losses. Reports made by the wardens, who for some years have been guarding the wood buffalo and who are now responsible for the new arrivals, indicate that the buffalo shipped last summer have wintered well and are in the best of condition. Quite a number of calves were noticed this year with the buffalo which were sent from Wainwright in 1925, and all the other signs point to the successful issue of this northward transfer of the plains buffalo.

Surnames and Their Origin

RAINES.

Variations—Rains, Raynes, Reynes. Racial Origin—English. Source—A locality.

Here is a group of family names the source of which is not at first recognizable because the spelling of the source has changed since the names developed from it.

There is an entry in the records of certain medieval guilds in England referring to "mercerie, canvas, conispanses, fustiane chasons, draps du Reynes and draps de says."

Those who know their modern French will recognize the word "draps" as cloth and the "soye" as the modern "sate," or silk.

"Draps du Reynes" was "cloth of Rennes," Chauver refers to it as cloth of "Raines."

In the middle ages Rennes, in Brittany, was one of the most important commercial and industrial cities of northern France, and was indeed famed for the quality of cloth it produced.

Among the English the name of this city was spelled in various ways, and judging from the fact that most family names developed from foreign cities were borne by merchants, and the fact that Rennes of the Middle Ages was particularly renowned for its commerce, there is little doubt that those who first used it in England were actually merchants, former residents of Rennes, who had settled in England.

Of course the surname at first had a prefix, probably the Norman French "du" or "de," and in its original form was "Thomas of Raines," "Hugo of Reynes," and other similar information.

MURRAY.

Variations—MacMurray, Moray. Racial Origin—Scottish. Source—A locality.

These family names were originally, and still are, of a Highland clan name and its variations. The Celtic form of the Clan Murray's name is "Siol Mhoiridh" or "Siol Mhoirrich." It is simply derived from the fact that the clan dwelt in that section of Scotland known as Moray.

Strangely enough, however, though the clan is distinctly Celtic, its founder was not. It was founded by the grandson of a Fleming who settled in Scotland during the reign of King David I, and who received from that monarch many favors, including large grants of land. The family founded by Freskin became thoroughly established in the nobility of Scotland, but it was a junior branch, not the senior branch of it, which developed the highland clan of that name. The first chief of the clan Murray was a son of the younger son of this Fleming settler in Scotland.

It has been claimed, however, that the Clan Murray does not in the strict sense of the term constitute a highland clan. In 1745 it was stated "The Murrays are no clan family, though the duke of Atholl is the head of a number of barons and gentlemen of the name of Murray in the lowlands; but he is deservedly placed here (among the list of highlanders) on account of his extensive following of about 3000 highlanders." It would seem that these members of the "clan" retained their membership in various other clans, though they lived under the leadership of the Murray chief.

Mrs. H. Oakes, Sarnia, Ont., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets in my home for the past fifteen years and I believe the good health my children enjoy is due entirely to this medicine. The Tablets are helpful at teething time; relieve colics and are always beneficial in the minor ailments of little ones. I have recommended Baby's Own Tablets to other mothers whose experience with them has been as satisfactory as my own."

After a Rainstorm.

It rained heavily all the afternoon, and then, between the hours of five and six, it ceased.

Those who had decided to catch a bus changed their plans and walked. The town was full of lights as if some brilliant thing had burst, and remained in the air and deep down in the ground.

There was a depth of exhalation. A tangible happiness drove one's feet along, lifting the chin and setting the face upward.

Everything was very high—very long. It seemed that the rain in dripping had caused all things to fall out of their natural proportions and remain thus in trembling uncertainty.

The men who walked ahead were suddenly become big—duplicated—their other half walking below them, upside down, in the pavement.

It was very blue down there, the tone one sometimes sees in a clear sky through rain that is still falling; a color drenched in atmosphere.

There were brown clouds, too, a little threatening; and there were many stars—strange shooting stars with tails that shook.

The daylight passed to late evening. There came another shower which intensified the illusion.

The men walked faster and the lights became more bright.

It seemed the town had risen to the sky, and dropped to meet another sky below. A circling heaven with one thin stretch of earth.

Our faces touched the stars. And now our walk is done. We scrape the mud from our shoes and close our doors behind us. We tread on carpets in drawing-rooms.

We are just little men again.

Climate and Sleep.

Sleep is largely a matter of climate, according to a new theory. In cold regions mankind needs a lot of fatty food and not too much sleep; in the tropics, on the other hand, a lot of sleep and very little fat in the diet is the best rule.

Some One of Importance.

There's some one of importance—Come to live across the street, And you never saw such "goings on," No! you never did indeed.

When the father comes from work at night, Just on the stroke of eight—Why, he's like to knock the people down In his haste to reach the gate.

Then, running up the garden path, He waves to a window high; "He must have got a fortune left," Said the laughing passers-by.

A fortune left!—A fortune left! Yes! his ship's come sailing in! There's now a baby in that house, And there's joy—outside and in.

"Salt of the Earth."

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said the Master to his disciples, using a common figure of speech to describe their function in society. The primary mission of Christianity is discharged without noise. It works most effectively when it is allowed to express itself in its own way. Like true salt, it does not attract notice while it makes its works. Men are influenced by it most deeply when it comes upon them unawares, working in them through the silent energies of the spirit found in devout and faithful men, from whom there issues the vitalizing power which lays hold of all who come in contact with them. So Christianity grows and spreads, transforming men's lives, giving them new visions, and filling them with joyous energy in their obedience to the will of God. When Christians fall in the zest and spice of faith, they are not merely ineffective, but become actually the source of mischief. But wherever its vigor and tang is felt in a man, his companions cannot ignore it. Contact with those in whom it operates has its inevitable influence.—The Times (London).

Announcement to RED ROSE TEA Enthusiasts

CENTURIES ago, when tea was first introduced to the English Nobility, the precious leaves—then almost priceless—were packed in sealed lead containers.

For many generations lead continued to be used as a protective package for all fine quality teas. Then the modern metal, Aluminum, was introduced. But during war-time and later, paper bags and paper boxes were largely used and have held sway ever since.

In our 30 years experience putting up Red Rose Tea we have used all these containers and each has some particular merit.

But careful tests over a long period prove that Aluminum is by far the best container that has yet been found, and paper packages of every kind the poorest. When in contact with dampness paper absorbs moisture which soon affects the quality of the tea, and in some instances completely spoils it.

Having found the paper package unreliable and uncertain, we have again adopted the Aluminum package which we used years ago. For we know now that Aluminum can be better depended upon than any other.

Unlike paper, Aluminum does not absorb moisture. It preserves all the original flavor and strength. So now and in the future Red Rose Tea will be packed in the Aluminum package, as it was in years gone by.

Canadian Tree Seeds.

One of the many interesting activities of the Forest Service, Department of the Interior, Canada, is the collection and extraction of tree seeds. Four special seed extraction plants now operate in the western provinces for the purpose of securing seeds from the cones of coniferous trees. During the winter of 1925-26 these four plants extracted twenty-five hundredweight of seeds. Large quantities of seed are supplied to the Forestry Commission of the British Isles for use in carrying out the program of reforesting unoccupied lands in Great Britain. Seed has also been shipped to the Forest Service of New Zealand for a similar reforestation program in that Dominion. In the latter connection it is interesting to note that the New Zealand Forest Service is headed by a Canadian who received his forestry training in Canada.
