MEL HILL'S STORY

Mr. Hill-was seen at his house by an Empire reporter scaterday, and without exhibiting any of that exuberance of spirits which might be looked for in an heir expectant to immense wealth, gave the facts of the case. Mr. Hill is a carter in the employ of Jolliffe & Co., the Queen street west furniture dealers. He is 53 years old and has a family of five children, several of whom are grown up. About four years ago he came to this city from Collingwood. For nearly three years he has spent his spare time and cash in trying to establish his claim as an heir to the Robert Liwards estate, and is confident that he has not wasted either in so doing. He has made several trips to New York for this purpose, and by enthusing other Canadian heirs in the matter has got the affair in good shape for a successful termination.

HE WAS A SEA CAPTAIN.

Robert Edwards, whose estate is being so carefully looked after now, was, so Mr. Hill says, his great-grandmother's father. He was a sea captain of a speculative turn of mind, and at the close of the eighteenth century, when New York was, if not a howling wilderness, at least a place where town lots could be purchased at a low igure, bought 62 acres of land, where now 2 feet would be worth a fortune. The estate in question lies in Broadway between Trinity church and the battery. In 1778 this estate was leased by the owner to the Trinity church corporation of New York for 99 years. The lease expired 16 years ago, and up to the present time the heirs have not succeeded in establishing their claims. Sixteen years ago Mr. Hill's father would have been a wealthy man by reason of his share in the inheritance but for one little but very important hitch in establishing his claim. The lease mysteriously disappeared. Two A PRIVATE OF THE BRITISH WEST INDIAN years ago this lease was found, and with its discovery hope revived in the bosoms of some 300 heirs spread all over the con-
