Fidelity.

I do not want you when your feet With buoyant footsteps tread on air And you can smile on all you meet, And banish care.

But when the road is long and cold, And you seem to wander far from home, And you are weary, sad, and old— Come then.

I do not want you when your name From lip to lip is proudly rolled, I do not want you when your fame Has brought you gold,

But when you fight, and strive, and press, And no one reads the songs you pen, And life is full of loneliness— Come then.

The Sabbath.

With silent awe I hail the sacred morn, Which slowly wakes while all the world Asleep is still, e'er a breeze is blown, A brave moment gurgles from the hills, And softer sings the linnets from the thorn.

The skyark warbles in a tone less shrill, Hail! light serene; hail! sacred Sabbath morn, The roots float silent, by in airy droves; The sun a placid yellow luster shows; The gales, that lately sighed along the groves, Have hushed their downy wings in sweet repose. The hovering rack of clouds forgets to move, So smiled the day When the first morn arose.

As Between the Two.

He—I don't think there is anything much finer than to have a beautiful yacht.

She—I'm surprised at you. Haven't you considered a beautiful wife!

JURY SAY NOT GUILTY.

END OF THE GREAT HYAMS TRIAL AT TORONTO.

Verdict in Half an Hour—Judge Ferguson Rules Strongly in Their Favor.

After 23 days of tedious consideration of the Hyams murder case at Toronto the prisoners were found not guilty on Saturday afternoon, and on the capital charge were discharged from custody.

They had scarcely stepped out of the dock before they were re-arrested by Detective Cuddy on charges of attempting to defraud the insurance company, and of conspiring to murder Mrs. Harry P. Hyams. In addition to these charges against both, Harry Hyams stands under the accusation of forgery.

The unfortunate twins accepted the warrants presented to them with smiling faces, evidently feeling that after their escape from the dreadful fate which so long had been their lot, they were now to be of no account in comparison. They were taken over to the central police station, and from there were removed to their old apartments in the jail.

CLOSING SCENES.

The proceedings at the trial on Saturday afternoon were in some respects the most remarkable which have ever been seen in a court of justice in this country. An audience unusually large and select had filled the court room in the morning with the intention of hearing the remainder of Mr. B. Oler's address to the jury.

The attendance was especially remarkable, and the Grand Jury box, the gallery and many of the seats in the body of the room were occupied by them. Mr. Oler's address was, perhaps, the most vigorous one which has ever been heard in the court, and it was not until the close of his speech that the jury retired to their deliberations.

He concluded at 12:20, and his Lordship Sir Justice Ferguson immediately began his charge to the jury. He did not take up the specific points of the evidence, but rather dealt with the broad general outlines of the case, and the points of his charge was decidedly in favor of the prisoners, and he spoke frequently in the most emphatic terms of the prosecution to be directed against the accused. He scarcely touched at all upon the evidence elicited by the defense, but frequently brought into clear relief the points which were in favor of the prisoners.

The testimony of the defense, too, was given much credence by his Lordship, the charge being delivered, and was listened to with profound respect not only by the jury but the spectators.

His Lordship was especially impressive, and when before dismissing the jury, after a very short speech, he pointed out to them that the true spirit of British justice leaned toward the escape of the innocent.

The conviction of one innocent man, the auditors in the court room felt that the scales of justice were held by a strong and steady hand.

JURY NOT LONG OUT.

The jury were not long in coming to a decision after what they had listened to from his Lordship. They retired to their deliberations, and in less than ten minutes after they had filed into their room of consultation they filed out and accepted the verdict of "not guilty" of the charge of having in the possession of a gun.

The little withered up prisoners accepted the verdict without a sign of relief. The court was, in fact, not allowed to hear the words which were to consign them to the gallows or give them liberty (temporary liberty at least) under the terms of the "warrant of release" which was read in full.

The words of the foreman were a formal pronouncement of what they were already quite sure they would hear. There was some little applause in the audience when the verdict was given, which was promptly stamped out by the court.

The British Admiralty is said to have obtained complete soundings from British merchant vessels which have repeatedly passed the Dardanelles.

THE SULTAN YIELDS.

Extra Steps Admitted Through the Dardanelles.

A despatch from Constantinople says:—The Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, Tewfik Pasha, called upon Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador, on Tuesday, and announced that the Porte had decided to issue the firmans ordering the passage through the Dardanelles of the extra gunships demanded by Great Britain, Russia, Italy, and Austria as additional protection for the safety of the foreign population here. This puts an end to a very dangerous situation, for there is no doubt that the powers would have insisted upon having their gunships here, even if it had been necessary to force the passage of the Dardanelles in order to get them here.

Not Prepared to T. Y. I.

She—No, Ned, it wouldn't be judicious for us to marry until after you have had your salary increased.

He (pleadingly)—But two can live cheaper than one, you know, Nellie.

She—Yes, but what's the use of my saying so, as a matter of fact he has to pay.

Danger.

First Tramp—It makes me nervous to sleep in one of these lodger's houses.

Second Tramp—Dat's so. Dem firemen would turn a hose on yer in a minute.

YOUNG FOLKS.

An Unwelcome Caller.

Jack Frost came to the window-pane, and softly tapped with his icicle cane. "Excuse me," I said, "the doors are tight, and I rather you wouldn't come in to-night."

So he scratched his name all over the glass, and the lady sneezed as she heard him pass.

The Cat That Went to College.

"Yes," auntie said, smiling, "a real live cat. I put her into the box myself and packed little bits of cold plunger through the slats the last thing, just as the stage man drove up. Poor little kitty! She was so surprised at her new and rather narrow quarters, but I know she was going to a very nice home and a very kind master—that was Uncle Jack, you know."

"O, was it truly Uncle Jack?" the children cried.

"Well, he wasn't Uncle Jack, then," auntie admitted, "but he is now, anyway. He was at college studying away as hard as ever he could, and you see, he got big rooms. So I sent my little, round-eyed, long-haired, silky fluff to keep him company."

It was a long time before the little pussy did have at college! The boys used to borrow her of Uncle Jack and make little dinners for her up in their rooms, and she didn't seem to stop her playfulness a bit. She frisked and tumbled as much as ever. Her master and opened his door Miss Fluff made a leap to his shoulder and purred her delight at seeing him again into his arms. Then began a frolic of a frolic! The only trouble was that when Uncle Jack was ready to stop, Fluff had only begun, so studying was rather a difficult matter. Greek roots with a bit of a saucy cat perching herself on the book or scurrying up and down the stairs, and Uncle Jack would expell Miss Fluff from college. But he didn't, oh, no, Fluff studied on and graduated with first honors one day after a while that she just had to let the sun for long periods and the moon for long periods. She made the most of those times to study.

When at last commencement time came and Uncle Jack put on his long black gown and went over to chapel one day with a lot of other boys in long black gowns, Fluff was missing. Uncle Jack could not find time to look her up, and he was so much hurried to hunt long. So nothing was seen of little Fluff, until she suddenly appeared in a long, silky white gown, and among the long black gowns, where the boys stood in solemn silence before the president to receive their diplomas. The crowd was so full of Fluff, as solemn and still as anybody! So she graduated with all the honors.

And that's the end of the story," auntie said.
