Farmer forgives 'pumpkin fiasco' thieves

BY JEREMY GRIMALDI
jgrimaldi@yrmg.com

Jay Reesor knows what it's like to make mistakes. He also knows that he's been forgiven for a few in his lifetime. And considering it took place on Thanksgiving, he's willing to forgive and forget the 200 or so people who passersby say trespassed onto his north Markham farm's pumpkin patch to take some snapshots... and some pumpkins. "I have made mistakes and I have been forgiven," said the owner of Reesors, which also has a store in Stouffville. "In this situation, some people made mistakes, but I think some good can come of something that was not so good." Although he admitted it was likely the people who initially parked their cars near the Ninth Line and Elgin Mills Road property, just south of the community of Stouffville, to take photographs that drew the huge crowd, he said
