

5 things to do before summer ends

The arrvial of Labour Day weekend signals that our beloved summer is coming to a close. Before you send kids are back to school, here are five things you can do to make the most out of the upcoming long weekend — and last few days of summer 2016.

- Plan a jam-packed day of fun: Clear your schedule, pack up your family and spend an entire day together doing activities each of you really love. This could easily become a family tradition of spending one full day seeing a movie, hitting up Wonderland, having a picnic or whatever other adventures you can come up with.
- Make good use of warm-weather gadgets: Didn't get you use your new drone as much as you'd hoped? How about hopping on your Sea-Doo for one last spin? Enjoy those outdoor toys that can only be used when snow isn't on the ground.
- Spend a day by the pool or at the beach: Get a little extra sun and pull out your pool floaties for a day in the water. It's a great way to get your friends and family together for one last day or two of relaxation and cannon ball competitions before the leaves change colour.
- Camp out in your own backyard: Sleeping inside is so overrated. Have a tent lying around? Spend an afternoon and evening playing games and stargazing while we've still got the warm nights to do it. Throw in a campfire and s'mores and you've got yourself a good time.
- Be a tourist in your own town: Have you ever really explored your own community? There are probably a lot of great shops, restaurants and landmarks that you've never discovered or knew existed. Spend a day learning more about what your town or city has to offer. Come on, be a little adventurous and try something new. - Brea Bartholet
