

Everything good comes to end

● From page 1

On a sunny November morning when the closure was announced, the mood at the market was solemn. Vendors grappled with the idea of closing up for good in six weeks time.

That's not a lot of time when you've been working at the market for more than 40 years like Paul Vella.

He was there Sunday as he has been every Sunday for as long as he can remember selling produce.

"It's too bad we are closing but what can you do," he said. "Everything good comes to end."

Vella said the people of Stouffville are going to miss the place on 10th Line that is a community hub and tourist attraction.

Mark Hefferin from Country Choice Meats has been working at the market since he was in public school.

"That's 23 years, if you're counting," he said, while busy slicing up steaks to serve a loyal customer. "A lot of the customers have been here since I started."

Hefferin said he plans on going to custom freezer orders when the market shuts down.

While the past decade of the market wouldn't be described as its glory years, vendor Wanda Hall said it still had some of the magic that had the place jam-packed years ago.
