

BEYOND IMAGES 2005

By Kate Gilderdale • Stouffville Free Press

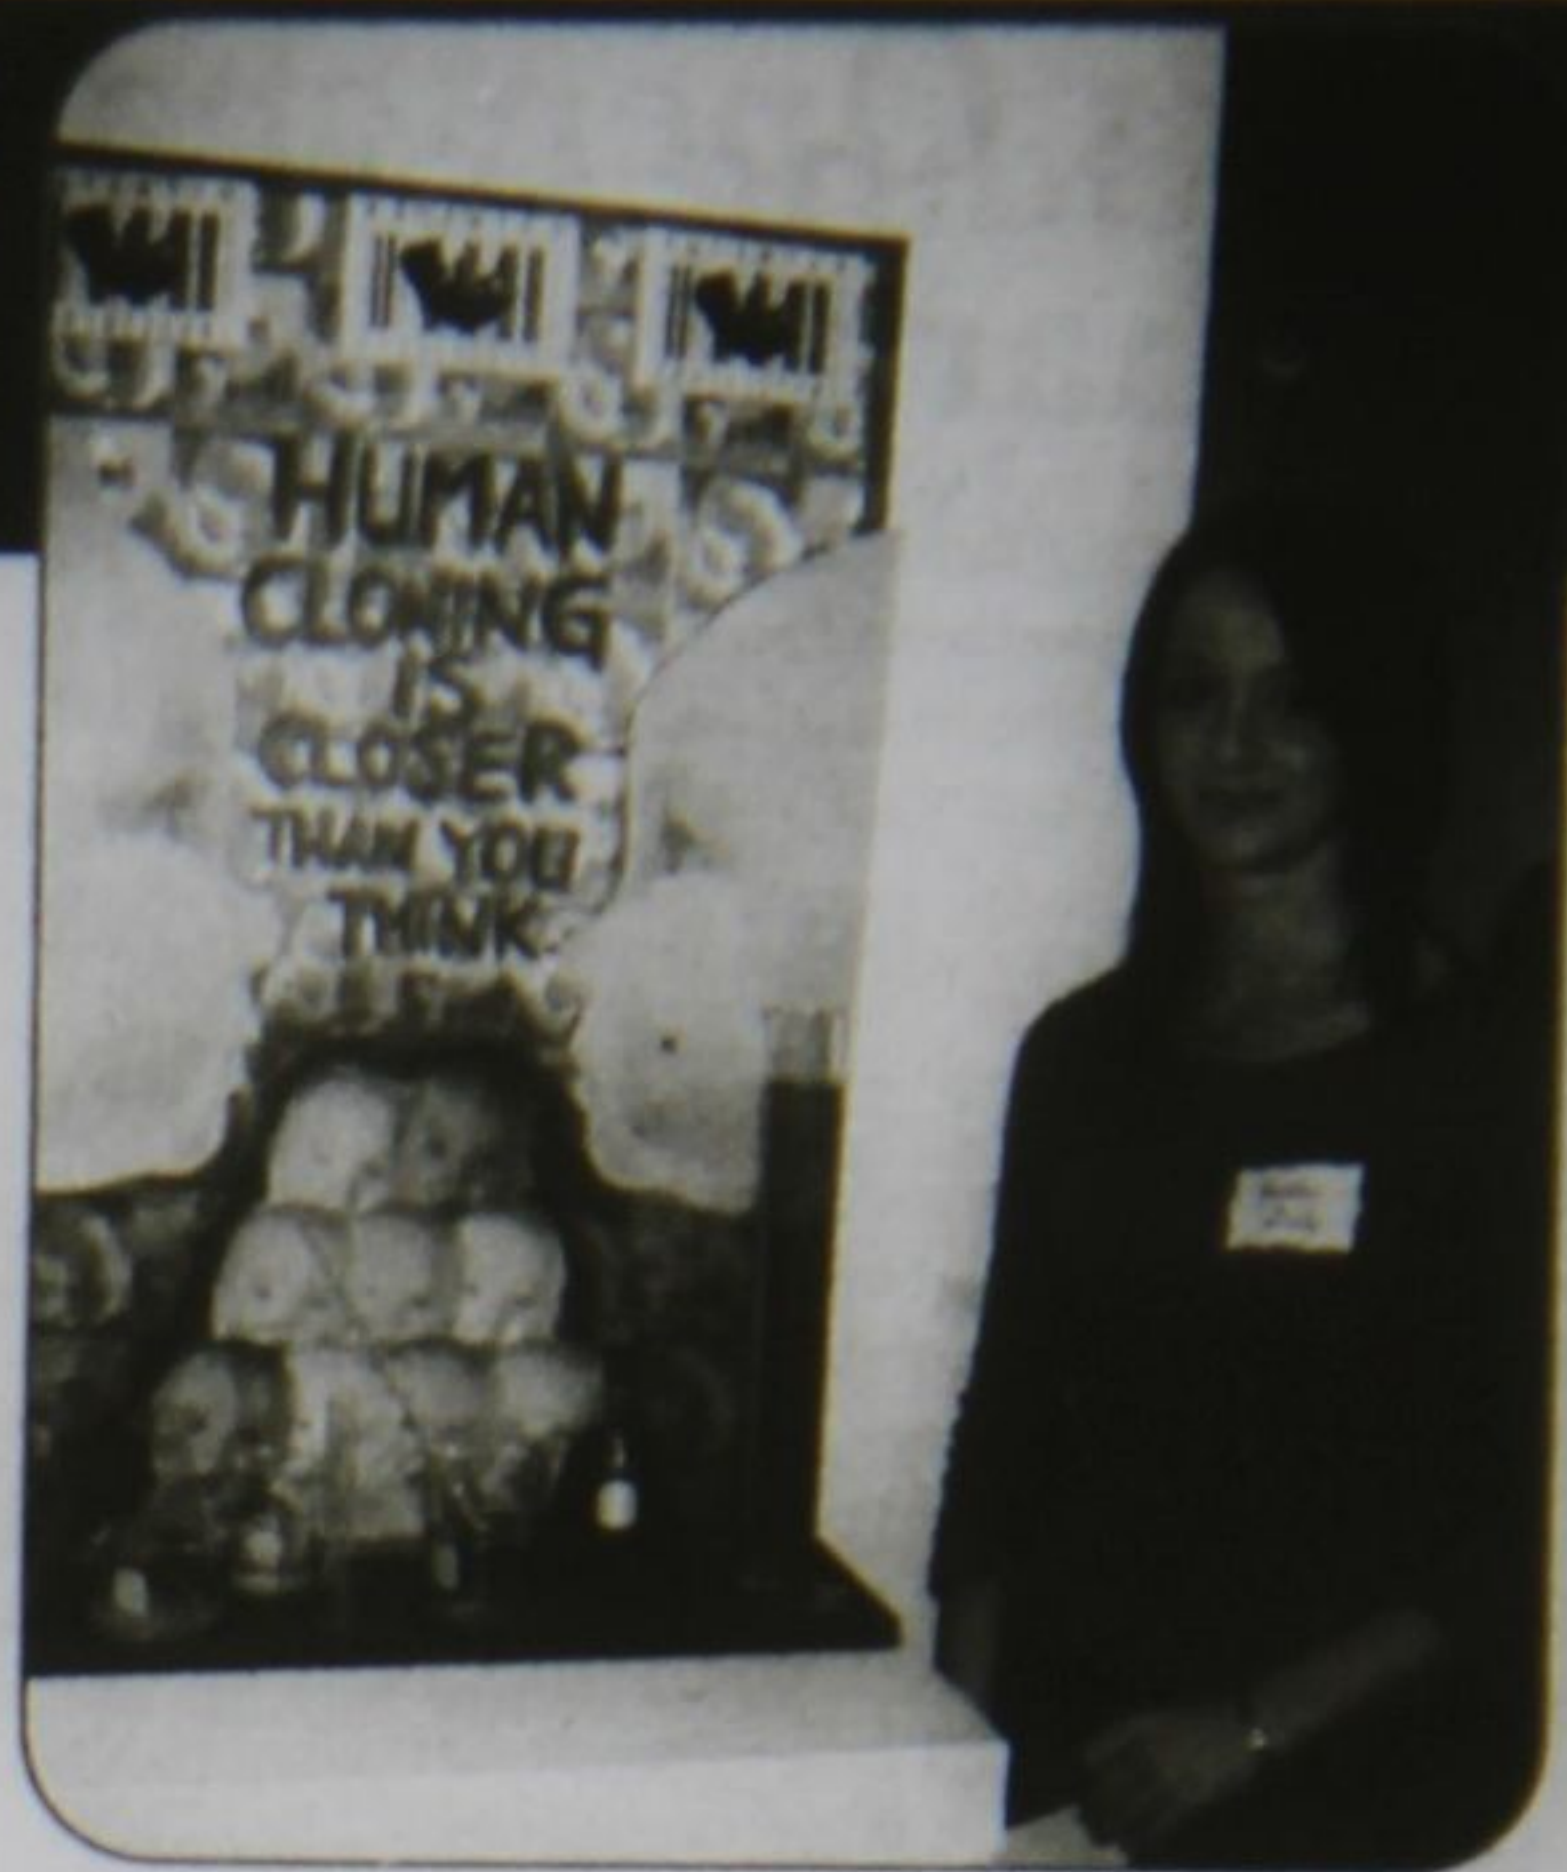

Beyond Images 2005 showed, once again, the importance of the Latcham Gallery in providing an artistic outlet for young people in the community.

The annual exhibition featured the work of graduating art students from Stouffville District Secondary School and offered a powerful, and at times unsettling, take on the rapidly changing world we live in. Topics ranged from the death of Kurt Cobain and the potential for human cloning to celebrity worship and the constant pressure on young women to be thin.

A large crowd attended the opening party and the artists were on hand to discuss their work. Beyond Images was generously sponsored by Giles Chevrolet, Button Armstrong & Ness and JVK Life & Wealth Advisory Group. The Stouffville Lions Club donated the awards.

SDSS art student Ben De Boer ponders the blurring of the role between private and public life in his mixed media piece entitled 'Paparazzi', which was among the thought-provoking works in Beyond Images 2005 at the Latcham Gallery in December and January.

Heather Drudge considers the potential impact of technology in her arresting work, entitled 'Our Future??', one of the excellent pieces featured in Beyond Images 2005 at the Latcham Gallery. "My intention is not to take sides, but to present the facts and let people form their own opinion," she said.

Jeremy Schell showed that art and sport are not mutually exclusive in his tribute to Canada's national game, aptly entitled 'Hockey Night In Canada'. The piece was part of Beyond Images 2005, the annual exhibition by graduating SDSS art students.

While Tammi Silver's 'Distortion 101' was inspired by the art of body piercing, this powerful piece also addresses the disturbing problem of self-mutilation. It was featured in the Latcham Gallery exhibition, Beyond Images 2005, which showcased the works of graduating art students from SDSS.
