HOME and GARDEN

Enjoy your garden structure year round

Thinking of a little private space to call your own? Add a potting shed, garden office, studio or workshop to your outdoor life and turn it into your personal sanctuary and source of pride. Adhere to the saying, "a place for everything and everything in its place" to help you select the perfect outdoor structure for your home; one that will delight visitors and offer practical functionality to you and your family. Here are some tips to ensure that your outdoor structure suits your needs:

- To help determine the size you need, begin your planning process by making a list of all the functions you would like your structure to serve.
- Consider partitioning the structure if you have a variety of needs such as potting/storage shed requirements and studio space.
- In selecting a location, be aware of your access to natural light, ventilation and electricity and water (do you need a hose or do you want to plumb it for a sink or toilet)?

- Always buy quality. In the long run, you'll save money, since well-built structures have a longer life and resilient roofs and siding that will survive even the harshest weather conditions.

Aesthetics are important; you may choose to highlight your structure or make it a secret hideaway. Your choice! Whatever you decide, make sure you look at photos of many other outdoor structures to get a sense of the countless options available.

CENTURY MILL LUMBER

"Bringing You the World by the Board Foot."

A Complete Selection of foreign & domestic hardwoods, pine & hemlock.

Size Does Matter!

Straight from West Africa, in a circuitous way, we now carry Pommele Sapele and Bubinga. Even if you do not know anything of their appearance, you will want to see them.

Upon your perusal you may have an 'Eureka moment' concerning why you need it. I have some suggestions:

- Replace that ratty and stained pool table with a single piece 5x18 conference table.
- A 40"x12" coffee table
- Fencing your backyard? Just 4-5 boards should do it.

Century Mill's Jack Wilkinson and friend are dwarfed by newly arrived Pommele Sapele board, measuring 5 feet wide by 12 feet long.

The Possibilities are Endless

Bring 3 friends and a big truck if you plan on taking this board cash & carry!
