

wartime response. The accomplishments of Native veterans are a source of tremendous pride — to them, to their families, and to their communities. We hope this booklet will help to extend this pride to all Canadians and provide a measure of recognition to Canada's Aboriginal veterans for all they did, and all they gave up, to make our world a better place.

Finally, in describing the experiences of some twenty Native veterans, this publication attempts to present a general overview of the wartime sacrifices and achievements of all of Canada's Aboriginal peoples. However, readers should note that thousands of other stories could have been included in the following pages, and remain to be told another day.
