Work on the grand opera house being rushed ahead just as rapidly as is possible to have it. The interior can fairly be seen to grow towards perfection under the skilful hands of the workmen. Contractor McLeod has pledged himself to have the house ready for the 13th inst., and he seldom says anything that he does not mean. In this instance the rapid pro gress being made with the finishing would tend to carry out this belief. Electric lights were long ago placed in the building, permitting the work men to carry on their labors with fa coocoocoocoocoocoo cility. The plastering has been com pleted, the galleries made ready for immediate occupation, and nothing any account remains to make th house habitable but the laying of the main floor and placing the seats position.
