GIVEN BY THE DRAMATIC CLUB, OF QUEEN'S

The Grand Opera House-The Amateur Actors Did Excellent Work-The Sweet Singing Of Miss Rankin, Of Montreal.

The people of Kingston had the opportunity last night of witnessing the work of Queen's dramatic club, which under the careful direction of Profs. Dyde and Cargion, has become one of the most important associations connected with the university. At the Grand opera house nearly every seat from the "pit" to the "gods" taken for the performance, which had been heralded for several weeks past as being in aid of the Grant convocation hall. That made the affair popular at once, though of course the fact of a Kingston university dramatic troupe appearing in a Shakespearean play would alone have warranted good patronage.

The large authence was indeed highly pleased with the good work done by the amateur actors and with the production as a whole, for the characters were all correctly costumed. else the performance would have lost as they do. A scene between Brutus and Cassins (Julius Caesar V., 3) was fairly well given by Messrs. E. J. Reid and A. G. Burrows. Much more realistic, however, was the scene of "Autolyeus (a rogue) and the clown" (Winter's Tale II., 2), Messrs, J. A. McSporran, and C. Redmond, both of whom did remark-

His interpretation of the passionate, meditative and gentle speedles, and his gestures could hardly have been improved upon by an amateur actor. After the final scene, Mr. Mackinnon and Miss Vaux had to respond to a cur tain call, so hearty was the applause Miss Lilian Vaux, as the queen acted with marked dignity, grace and force. Some of her gestures were very effective. Miss Isabel Bryson was well fitted for the role of "Ophelia," whose gentleness, sweetness and womanliness were excellently brought out in word and movement by that graceful young lady. J. A. McSporran showed exceptional versatility. He is cut out for broad comedy, in which role he excelled when personating Autolyeus, the rogue (Winter's Tale). But he also Another part well taken was that of "Polonius," by T. D. Macgillivray, coats, Bibby's.

Between the dramatic portions he programme, Miss Rankin, of Montreal, sang several selections. She has a contralto voice of remarkable sweetness and wide range. No sweeter or mellower voice has ever been heard here. Mis Rankin is fortunately without that low mannish tone so common to contraltos. Her selections were Shakespearean : "Come Away. Death" (Twelfth Night): "Willow Willow," (Hamlet); "Orpheus and His Lute" (Henry VIII); "Who Is Sylvia?" (Two Gentlemen of Verona) All were rendered in a pleasing taking manner, and the singer received hearty applause, but, on account of the lengthy programme, did respond to the encores, except graceful courtesies. Miss Singleton played the prano accompaniments with taste and delicacy. The orchestra did well in some selections, but murdered others. On the whole, however, it was fairly tuneful. The stage settings, under the direction of Mr. Brannigan, were ex-
