He Did Not Give Right Name For Sake of Friends.
Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Feb. 7.—Frederick Schultz was hanged in the jail yard here this morning by hangman Raelle for the murder of Mrs. Craig, on August 7th last. He went to the scaffold with the same composure that he had shown all through. On the way from the jail to the scaffold he met constable Pearson, and said: "Good-bye, Mr. Pearson. I hope to see you some time again." On the scaffold he said, "Here goes an innocent soul into eternity; that is all I have to say."

The drop fell at eight o'clock; ten minutes after Schultz was pronounced dead by jail surgeon Adams. The man had been known as Lindsay as well as Schultz, but confessed before death that neither was his real name. This, however, he declined to tell on account of friends. The black flag was displayed from the court house and the town bell tolled fifteen minutes before and after the drop fell.

NO DEMAND AT HOME.
Berlin, Feb. 7.—The annual report of the Trades Union, the chief corporation of business men in the city, fully confirms the statements regarding the distressed condition of trade in Germany. It states the purchasing power of the people had diminished, and the number of workmen who had fallen out of employment was increasing. Compared with the year 1899-1900, the exports from Germany have risen 470,000,000 marks (about $118,000,000), but this is due to efforts to sell products to foreigners at any price, in consequence of the being no demand at home.

TAMWORTH IN FLAMES.

Thirteen Buildings Reduced to Ashes.
A WHOLE BLOCK FIRESWEPT.

LATE KINGSTON MERCHANT A HEAVY LOSER.

Fire Started in Barber Shop—No Appliances Available—Only the Most Desperate Fighting Saved the Village From Destruction.
(By Our Own Reporter.)
Tamworth, Feb. 6.—The main business section of this village lies in a narrow strip between the main street and the river. This afternoon it was fireswept, and in two hours the substantial frame structures were burned to the ground, with almost all their contents. It was not Tamworth's first bitter experience of a conflagration. On April 20th, 1895, the village from the present post-office building to the river, was consumed, though the loss was not so great as in the present case, where much valuable stock was burned. A Whig reporter reached the village at seven o'clock in the evening, and witnessed a scene of desolation. Three-quarters of the block on the east side of Concession and Bridge streets, was in flames. The fire in the section occupied by D. E. Rose's store, the fire was still burning, and continued all night, there being so much oil and coal among the debris. The snow mantled streets were black with the wreckage of wood and merchandise, and the scene was sad in the extreme. Well was it, however, that the fire occurred by daylight, as such a conflagration in the hours of darkness would have wrought far greater loss of property, and possibly also of life.
The origin of the fire is unknown. However, it started in the rear of the barber shop of Bruce Richardson, on Concession street. The discovery of the blaze was made by Mr. Rose's son, who smelled smoke in the store shortly after one o'clock. At first, the fire could not be located, but it was soon found to be in the barber shop next door. The alarm was given, and L. Way broke into the tonsorial place, which was closed. Mr. Richardson being at dinner. But the blaze had gained much headway, and when discovered, was eating its way into the store-house of the same place. In business, which was stocked with combustibles. There could be no temporary check, and the residents saw at once that it would be a struggle to save the village. There are no fire appliances in Tamworth, which is an incorporated village, so the fight was with the bucket alone.

Fighting The Flames.
Vigorously did the people attack the burning buildings. The church bells pealed out an alarm, and soon the farmers of the district came in hot haste to assist in saving the village. Everyone worked with a will, and presently saw that their labors were not in vain. The farmers' large sleighs were used to cart away quantities of stock and household effects, principally from the surrounding buildings.

The fire first spread from the barber shop to Rose's general store, adjoining, and then, after making its way through Miss Donoghue's dress-making establishment, leaped across a gateway, to the general store occupied by James Johnston, formerly of Kingston, and owned by H. E. Thornton. Thence it spread to John Floyd's dwelling, and thence to the general store of the latter, where its progress was stayed, by hard work. After Mr. Rose's store, at the corner of Bridge street, became well ablaze, the very element continued down Bridge street, sweeping across the street, and reaching the store of William Rose. At that point there was nothing more to burn, and the eastward limit was reached. In rear of the central portion of the block were several storehouses owned by H. E. Thornton, which likewise went up in flames.

Beyond the store of John Floyd & Son, damage was done to several buildings. York's shoe and barber shop, Barris's grocery, and Michael Donoghue's dwelling were greatly wrecked in the efforts to save the contents. Then, shortly across Concession street, where the fire occurred, several other buildings were more or less damaged—J. Taylor's dwelling, L. P. Well's harness store, and a vacant store owned by John Cunningham. Diagonally across from Rose's store on Bridge street, C. G. Coxall's general store, a brick structure, received some wrecking, but no damage was done to the stock. It was feared that the latter building was doomed, but a hard fighting brigade of villagers saved it from destruction, and with it the post office.

The snow on the roof was a great factor in keeping the conflagration within certain bounds. Had there been no snow it would indeed be hard to say what might have happened. The village was very lucky in sustaining no further loss, as everything pointed to the total destruction of the whole business section. By four o'clock, the fire was well under control. On account of the rapidity with which the frame structures burned, there was no time to send for or await assistance from outside fire brigades. The whole destruction was done in two hours, and it would have taken that time to send an engine from Kingston.

The services to which happened were remarkably few. Simon Keller, farmer, Mr. Coxall and Mr. Rose had their faces somewhat burned, and Miss Aylesworth, daughter of the postmaster, cut her right hand severely while sitting to work in a window of a private residence as she got out the contents.
Mr. Rose will start business anew, for a time, in the vacant store owned by John Cunningham, and in the spring will build. To-day he was in Kingston purchasing new stock in drugs and general merchandise. He had only recently purchased the drug stock of C. R. Jones, value $2,500. This is what causes Mr. Rose's chief loss, as it was not insured.

Mr. Johnston has not yet decided what to do. He opened business in Tamworth only six weeks ago.

As Tamworth has suffered so disastrously in recent years from conflagrations, no doubt the residents will now think more seriously than ever of getting some fire-lighting appliances.

The Losses Given.
It is estimated that the loss will amount to $30,000, a low figure, because of the cheap frame structures. The greatest loss is in stock, and the least loss is in D. E. Rose's and James Johnston. The insurance is less than half the loss. The companies involved are the London Mutual, the Macantile, the Caledonian and the Perth.

Mr. Rose's buildings were worth $2,000 and his stock $5,500. He is insured for about $3,000. Nothing in his store was saved except a few show cases, and some odds, mortgages, books and other papers from his sale, in which are still some other important papers, if the safe is intact in the ruins. Mr. Rose had just finished auditing the township books, which fortunately were saved from his sale.

Mr. Johnston's stock was valued at $7,000, and of this about $1,000 worth was saved. The insurance amount to about half. The building occupied by Mr. Johnston was owned by H. E. Thornton, whose insurance on it and his outbuildings amounted to $1,200.

John Floyd thinks that his loss will be very small. He was insured for $2,000, and saved considerable of his stock.

Miss Mary Reid, who owned the building occupied by Miss Donoghue and Bruce Richardson, had but $200 insurance, far below her loss. The latter had no insurance on their goods. The house occupied by Mr. Rowson was owned by Mr. Rose. The surrounding buildings, damaged to a small extent, are insured.

The total of the casualties, including surviving wounded, was 5,240 officers and 100,701 men.

Dewet Surrounded.
London, Feb. 7.—The correspondent of the London Times at Pretoria, in reviewing the war situation, says that British operations north of the Delagoa railway have resulted in rounding up several groups of Boers at Pilgrim's Rest, under Schoeman. Commandant Irshardt led to his men about the independence and the supremacy of the Boers, and they held a meeting at Sterksburg. Commandant Muller had 200 men near Belfast, and Beyers, with a few burghers is east of Pieterburg. South of the Delagoa line the Boers are still active, and from occasional penetrations the constabulary line. In this district ten armed burghers make a town unsafe at night. There are small commandos in the eastern Transvaal. The largest consists of 300 men, under the command of the Orange River Colony line of blockhouses is complete from Heilbron to Botha's Pass, and from Kroonstadt to Harriemid. The Boers are being cornered, and after the capture of the last holdout, the city country in the north-eastern part of the Orange River Colony, is a circumcised area with blockhouse lines to north, south, and west, and the mountains under the east and render their capture much more probable.

Bloody Fight Between Convicts And Keepers—Latter, Taken by Surprise And Poorly Armed, Were Quickly Overcome—Many Prisoners Recaptured.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 7.—Novos Vremya tells an extraordinary prison delivery at the prisons for females at Smolensk, in which all the guards numbering thirty-eight, were murdered and 112 convicts escaped.

Two of the inmates, Jekatorina Michailova and Xenia Loginova, were in the cell, organized a revolt. When everything was in readiness a signal was given and simultaneously an attack was made on the wardens and guards, all of whom were quickly overpowered. The crustal kind of weapons used by the revolting convicts, the paper saws, but the guards were inadequately armed, and taken completely by surprise.

After the fight, the scene about the prison and in the corridors resembled a shambale. Walls and floors were smattered with the blood of the officials who had been killed and several of the escaping convicts who were injured in the melee. Many of the convicts were later recaptured.

In relating the story of the uprising Novos Vremya fails to explain the mystery of how the women obtained the weapons and tools with which liberty was obtained.

HE SOLD PASSES.

A Railway Man Has Gone To The States.
Quebec, Feb. 7.—An employee of the mechanical department of the Intercolonial railway, at River Du Loup, is a fugitive in the United States. He is charged with purloining passes from the official pass book, filling them in and then selling them to any person he could find to purchase them. The number of passes taken up by the conductors on the different trains, was so largely out of proportion to the usual issue that the passenger department made an investigation with the result that it was discovered that passes, not authorized by the proper authorities, were issued from the office of the mechanical department. One of the officials, a married man, with a family, who evidently learned of the investigation, suddenly took his departure and crossed to the United States. Since his departure thirteen stolen blank passes, that were afterwards filled in and forged, were traced to him by parties who state that they purchased them from him.
