THE TRAIN NEEDED

It Should Run From Belleville To Brockville.

What Kingston needs in the way of a late morning train east is one from Belleville to Brockville, leaving here about half past eight o'clock. Thus people from Deseronto and Napance could reach here at a seasonable hour, have half a day in the city for Lusiness purposes, and return on the late and all more than an accommodation train men; it wants a train that will also ght, hav-bring in people from the immediate western district.

Formerly the G. T. R. ran a local was passenger train from Kingston to Brockville, leaving here at 6 a.m., a es were very early hour, but it did not pay. Iwo. At However, it is thought that if the f time the some was a too Lwo railway company see fit, a train begolds each. But the Cornwall players tween Belleville and Brockville would pay, and also be a great accommodiation to the won faily.

> Justice Britton, in acknowledging the toast, stated that, although naturally he was pleased to receive appointment as a judge, yet it was not without much pain that he severed his connection with the city in which had lived for so many years, and with the people amongst whom he had spent the best part of his life. He referred to his early struggles and to the fact that his coming to Kingston was the result of chance. He had been to Belleville, Brantford, Peter-boro and other places to spy out the land, and, finally on going home, his sister had sugge ted that his location sister had sugge ted that his location be decided by lot. Kingston was put in with the other places, and it was drawn, and so he came here without Quence or connection, or with inything to depend upon except at chance might throw in his way had been successful, he was thank to say, although he had to fight way against so many able men belonged to the bar of Kingston times past, notably Sir Henry mith and James O'Rielly. He hoped e would be able to sustain the honor of the Kingston bar as a judge upon the bench. He had already found that the duties of a judge were of a most onerous description; indeed his former life, though a laborious one, was far ess laborious than his life as a judge. Justice Britton thanked very warmly e members of the bar for the comment paid him, and said that the ions of regard which he had d. would always be a source of

R. T. Walkem, K.C., proposed coupling it with the name of Price. Dr. Walkem first complimented justice Britton on his appointment to the honorable position judge, and expressed his opinion that the country is a great gainer by that appointment, inasmuch as justice Britton's large experience at the bas and in business affairs eminently quali fied him to deal with those matters which come before a judge for decision. At the same time he assured ustice Britton that his brethren of the bar in Kingston parted with him ly, the relations between justice Britton and his fellow-members had increased in warmth and cordiality. They had all admired his talents, but in the later years of his life he had developed qualities which had in a large measure received, not merely esteem, but the warm regard of those with whom he was brought into con-

Dr. Walkem made a comparison berking out the same admirable judiial system, the difference being chiefthat the jurisdiction of the county ort was limited as to amount, that asses of cases were withfrom its jurisdiction altogethand that the county judge was led upon like maids of all work to all sorts of services in the ch court judge was liable to be red hither and thither, forced it up with all accommodation, olf. On the other hand the councourt judge, of whom judge Price as an admirable representative, was of all he surveyed Price, he said, had a marvel aring the course of twenty-four years

Judge Price, in reply, stated that he rule he adopted in giving his de-isions was to lay aside all emotionfeeling, and to consider only the aw of the question.
