A Setting Of The Teeth In Britain.

DELAREY, IT IS SAID, WILL TREAT HIM WELL.

Lord Roberts Asks For a Suspension.Of Judgment-Praise :For Delarey in View Of His Scientific Tactics-It Was a Surprise To Methuen's Forces.

London, March 11 .- A feeling akin to that created during the memorable week of disasters early in the South African war, was aroused by the news made public yesterday, of the capture of lord Methuen, the rout of his column of 1,200 men, and the capture of four guns by Gen. Delarey. There can be traced in many quarters the same sentiment that was so prominent, as ruary was $1,405 ounces. well as a setting of teeth and an increased dertermination not to be terred in the main aim. Lord Roberts' appeal, in the house of lords, for a suspension of judgment on Gen. Methuen is generally accepted without hesitation, indeed, sympathy for Gen. Methuen personally seems to outweigh in some quarters consideration of the military effects of his reverse. His popularity is unquestionable, and gratification is accord ingly expressed, that he has fallen in to the hands of Gen. Delarey, who is regarded as being a human man, and, who, it is believed, is certain to treat him well. The success of Gen. Delarey's tactics elicits praise from the Daily Telegraph, which says editorial-

"The Boer commander in his latest, as well as his previous exploit of a few weeks ago near Kroonstadt, has shown what no other leader on the side of the enemy has ever done, a mastery of daring, yet severely scientific tactics, which would do credit to any professional soldier. If Delarey were steeped in Clause, Witz and Jomini he could not have struck with more skill or design or certainty in

It does not escape notice that on the face of these details, Gen. Methuen and his staff were absolutely unnware of Delarey's presence in the neighborhood, which prompts the Standard and other papers to ask, notwithstanding their professed solve to suspend judgement what the British were doing. Furthermore, it is remarked that the Boers were in nowise overwhelming strength being apparently but 1,500 to the British 1,

This, says the Standard, is undeniably a severe shock to British selfrespect, but probably the bitterest draught in the dose is the fact that more than 500 British mounted troops were chased by the Boers for four miles from the scene of action. This, exclaims the pro-Boer Daily News is terrible, a most humiliating statement for any Englishman to read. Lord Methuen's capture is believed here to mean the beginning of a new phase in the South African war. Although none of the war office officials will permit himself to be quoted on the subject, the opinion is general in military circles that the Boers will hold Gen. Methuen as a hostage or which included the execution of rebel prisoners. There are now prisoners in the hands of the British in South Africa, several men who are to be tried and whose deaths it is now feared would mean harm to Methuen. The killed include Lieuts, G. R. Venning and T. P. W. Nesham, of the Royal artillery, who were both killed while serving their guns with case-Advices received last night say that the force under Gen. Delarcy was almost entirely dressed in British uniforms.
