ject of Rev. Prof. Cody's sermon in St. Paul's church, his text being, 'Be not drunk with wine, but be fillthe spirit." There were three appetites hunger, thirst, sex. The sin of hunger, gluttony, was rampant in monastic days, but had been largely outgrown by civilized and busy men. The beast still remained in some, however. It was well to consider whether or not this sin in its recrugorgeous banquets, royal and otherwise, which were oftentimes barbarously ostentatious and suggestive of the gluttony of old. He will find it necessary to consider the nature of his farm: the suitability of his buildings and implements; the cost of hired help, if such is required; the proximity of a good market for his finished products and many other details. The comparative advantages of beef-growthe first point considered by a farmer without a good deal of deliberation. with a smaller expenditure for labor and utensils is perhaps true, and it certainly does not require the constant attention to business that dairying entails. Under adverse circumstances, such as scanty pastures, lack of proper winter feed and care, etc., they will probably yield a greater percentage of profit than tions been accustomed to good food and care. The Guernseys, although highly thought of in the United States, have never gained sufficient foothold in Canada, to enable our farmers to judge their suitability for this country. Both they and their close relatives, the Jerseys, are especially adapted for the production of fancy butter or cream for a highpriced city trade, and the majority of Canadian herds of these two breeds, are, I think, used for this purpose.
