DELAKEY THE CHIVALROUS
THE BRAVEST OF ALL THE BOER LEADERS.
Douglas Story Describes Him as Having the Appearance of a Hebrew Patriarch and Manner of an Old-Time French Seigneur—A Character Sketch.
The most dignified of all the Boer generals, Gen. Delarey has the appearance of a Hebrew patriarch in the manner of an old-time French seigneur.
When first I met him, in his tent, during the present war, he rose, and, speaking in the tall, said: "Sir, I welcome you. You have a reputation as an honest man, and the republic has need of truthful chroniclers in these days."
So ceremonial a greeting was never vouchsafed to me before or since, by any Boer leader in the war.
And yet in Delarey a true Boer. The fine lines of his Huguenot ancestry are apparent in his high-bridged, finely chiselled nose, his well-poised head, his delicate hands and feet. His breast is swept by a well-combed beard, and his whole stature shortened by the massiveness of his fine head.
Gen. Delarey stepped into the war with a fine reputation as a leader. As a field cornet he had served his country in all of its native wars since 1852, and when the Free State was at war with the Basutos in 1865 he had charge of a commando.
For eleven years he has occupied a seat in the first volksraad, and gained for himself there a well-earned reputation as the silent member. A lifelong opponent of Paul Kruger, he said some years ago, in my presence, to very intimate friends of his and mine, "No good can possibly come to this state until that old span is out of the way." His known opposition to president Kruger cost him the position of commandant-general when Piet Joubert died.
In the war Gen. Delarey was not a man to seek to add to his reputation by self-advertisement, nor were his political opinions such as to gain voluntary advertisement from the government. In war as in the road, Delarey has been the silent man. And yet has done work second to none in the field.
In the first days of the war, the Free State Boers recognized the importance of seizing Orange river and De Aar. To that end they dispatched two commandos—the Jacobusdorp and Faure-Smith—with orders to take those important and exposed British outposts. Unfortunately for the Boer plan, the rival commandos quarrelled incessantly, and valuable weeks were frittered away.
Finally, in a krygsraad held in the laager before Kimberley, it was decided that vech-general Prinsloo, with 300 Free Staters, and Gen. Delarey, with 600 Transvaalers, should join these commandos and push matters energetically in the southwest corner of the state. Vech-general Prinsloo was given supreme command, as it was a Free State affair, and Free Staters formed the majority of the force at his disposal.
The delay had given lord Methuen time to bring up his troops, and Kooen was ordered to retreat.

Explanation of the Suicide of W. H. Hofmeister.
St. Louis, Mo., March 13.—William H. Hofmeister, late supreme recorder of the legion of honor, who committed suicide, January 21st, within twelve hours after having been defeated for reelection, was short in his accounts with the leg to the amount of $30,000. This was announced in a signed statement last night by the officers of the order, who had just finished an examination of the books. The defalcations are shown as extending over ten years.
Decision On Saturday

Prime minister Waldeck-Rousseau lately injured in a collision between his carriage and a team car, has so far recovered as to be able to leave his home. The bandages on his head have been removed, but he wears a full cap. He seems to have entirely recovered from the shock to his nervous system.
While the men of the White Star ship, the Titanic, for New York were being through the customary life-boat drill at Liverpool, on Wednesday, one of the boats slipped from the davits and five men were thrown into the water. One of the men was drowned.

Prinsloo lost his battle at Belmont and Rooiblaagte (Grasspan).
So far, Delarey, the silent man had not interfered in the arrangements of matters. His chance came at Modder river.
The true story of Modder river battle has not yet been told. Suffice it that Gen. Delarey, and not Gen. Cronje, was the moving spirit on the Boer side.
He chose the positions, and he fought the battle. In the evening the Boers, who had lost all of their commissariat at Belmont, retreated to their holed laagers in search of food. They had won the battle, but physical necessity forced them to yield the ground.
It was at this fight that Gen. Delarey suffered a tragic loss. I give the little story exactly as the weathered general gave it to me. Remember only that it tragically, was infinitely deeper when one was in the actual presence of that taciturn, sad-eyed man, with his soft voice stilling the movement of his busy adjutants.
"Yes, I had my eldest boy with me in the first battle. He was only fifteen, and not far from his age, but wherever I went he went, and I think he did his duty."
"We were walking together from one position to another at Modder river, when the boy began to lag a little behind. I turned to him and asked if he were fit?"
"Yes, father."
"I said, 'You had better come with me to the ambulances, then.' And we walked across to the tent."
"Arrived there, he lay down, and began to grow very weak."
"I asked, 'Does it pain you, boy?'"
"Yes, father."
"Are you going to die, my son?"
"Yes, father."
"In half an hour he was dead, shot through the abdomen."
Outside a brandy-waist were off-saddling their horses. Across the tent the adjutants returned to their programs, and their despatches. The weary man in the middle slowly lit his great pipe and we talked of other things.
These two men, lord Roberts and Gen. Delarey, have a great bond in common in the loss of their first-born. No son had his eldest son been killed than Gen. Delarey was joined at the front by his second son, a boy barely yet fourteen, a Lee-Metford bullet has not found him also, that little lad will be bearing the terrible fatigues of guerrilla war at his father's side to-day.
At Magerfontein Gen. Delarey occupied the extreme left of the Boer position. The choice of the Magerfontein position was his in opposition to Gen. Cronje's suggestion of a stand at Scholey Nek. The Monday afternoon of the Magerfontein battle Gen. Delarey had to sustain a very fierce attack of lord Methuen's forces. His defence was perfectly successful, and the dead lay very thick before his position when captain Robertson met there with his burial party on the Wednesday.
Throughout the war Gen. Delarey has been continuously at the front. He lay very ill for a time at Krynburg, but he never left his bed to take command of the scattered commandos opposing lord Roberts' advance from Bloemfontein.
I had a curious discussion with Mr. Beit's once at the height of Gen. Delarey. I had called him a "smallish man," and the state secretary contended he was tall. In matter of inches I believe Mr. Beit was correct, but if I were describing the man who desired to recognize him, I should still call him a smallish man. His massive head and heavy beard, set on a spare, clean-cut body, give him the appearance of a man of very medium stature. And yet, I suppose, he is five feet ten and one-half inches in height.
He was a strange figure in the field. Dressed in a coarse, brown trowed suit, with a great light-colored patch on the seat of his trousers, he rode a ragged Bayote pony.
He had none of the trim neatness of Louis Botha, none of the alderman impressiveness of Lucas Meyer, and his keen eye and reflective face commanded respect. His native dignity asserted itself through his clothes.
No man has ever accused Delarey of anything approaching dishonesty. In him is grand material for a loyal British subject. He voted against the despatch of the ultimatum in the last secret session of the Volksraad before the war, and he has fought through out as a patriot, not as a political agitator.
A little extract from lord Roberts' despatch, dated Pretoria, October 13th, is characteristic of the man:
"Five prisoners have been taken at Krynburg, having been released by Delarey—Corpl. Welham and Ptes. Pretham and Nicholas, belonging to the Northumberland Fusiliers; Ptes. Dirgan, to the Border Horse; and Ptes. Keyser, to the Kimberley mounted corps. They were for some time in jail at Zwart, and not well treated until Delarey arrived there, when all went well with them."
Gen. Delarey is too good a soldier, and has too high a respect for his opponents, to stoop to petty annoyances against the men who fall into his hands. He is in every sense of the term one of nature's gentlemen—brave, courteous, and chivalrous.
Promises Smokeless Coal.
Harrisburg, Pa., March 12.—An announcement is made of the incorporation here, to-day, of the Somerset smokeless coal and coke company. The new company proposes to supply a quantity of coal that, when handled by competent firemen, will be almost free from smoke. The company has 125 acres of coal land near Harrisburg, Pa., and about 300 tons of coal a day are now being mined. The coal is found at fifty feet beneath the surface and is said to be of a different quality from the ordinary coal.
Orders To The Press.
Paris, March 12.—A despatch from Berlin to the Paris edition of the New York Herald says word has been sent to the newspapers to make no comment on prince Henry's visit to the United States. Only news of his movements is to be given. The special correspondent is to be bound by the same an order, and roundly abuses the United States for servility to royalty.

Death Fight in The Cage—Battle in The Zoo at Marseilles Witnessed by Three Children Too Terrified to Move.
Marseilles, March 11.—A strange duel was fought lately in the Marseilles zoo between the only adult gorilla in Europe and his keeper. The gorilla was killed after a fighting twenty hours, in which the keeper was horribly mangled that he died five hours later.
The famous gorilla was called Francois. He was one of the largest species, and always has been perfectly tractable, showing especial affection for his keeper, a man of the name of Journoux, until the latter married a few weeks ago.
The bride visited the zoo often, and the gorilla was very sensitive about the attention she showed Journoux. When he perceived that she undoubtedly preferred his keeper, Francois became more and more jealous, and finally Journoux found it impossible to approach the gorilla, especially if Mrs. Journoux was in sight.
Four days ago Francois was so angry and quiet that his keeper thought he was mad, and entered the cage to comfort his former pet.
The gorilla immediately sprang upon him. Journoux held a short tangle's fork, which alone accounts for the fight lasting so long.
It being almost time all the other keepers had withdrawn to a distant shanty. Only three children witnessed the terrible fight, and they were so terrified that they failed to fetch help until Journoux had succeeded in escaping from the cage.
The gorilla followed before the door could be shut and the duel was continued outside from one end of the building to the other, as is shown by the blood staining. Finally the children away yelling. By the time help arrived the gorilla had been killed.
The keeper was found with one eye torn out, rapidly losing blood from many other wounds, and laboriously trying to crawl away on all fours. One hand had been completely chewed off and the lower lip and part of the chin had also been bitten off.
FEAST OF HORSE FLESH.
Members Of Paris Society Eat Hippo Meat.
London, March 12.—Fashionable society sat down on Monday at an unique banquet as was ever held in Paris. The pieces of resistance were of horse-flesh and the flesh of mules and asses.
The givers of the banquet were the horse butchers and their wives, who have long been sold in Paris among the poor this was the first effort to make it fashionable.
Monsieur Zavarat, who presided at the dinner, declared the horse to be the cleanest and most nutritious of all meats, and that it is an unreasonable prejudice that existed against horseflesh, although people voraciously devour pork, which is the flesh of the most unclean animals, and mackerel, which is the scavenger of the seas.
Broken down racers and cab horses, when fattened, are in great demand in Paris by the horse butchers. The committee Monday night served up the flesh of a horse that had won many steeplechases at Auteuil. The committee announced that it intended to hold a fat horse procession during the Easter holidays.
Fifteen hundred of Paris' fashionable aristocrats, the dinner and the ball that followed.
Machinists May Strike.
Chicago, Ill., March 12.—At a mass meeting to be held in association hall to-night it is expected that definite arrangements will be made for a general strike of machinists when the present working agreement expires, May 20th, unless better terms are granted by the employers.
The demands of the men call for a nine-hour day with a one-hour wage-scale of thirty cents an hour in all machine shops, and an eight-hour day with a minimum wage scale of forty-five cents an hour for all machinists employed outside the shops. The employment of union men exclusively is demanded also.
Escaped The Duty.
Montreal, March 12.—The dominion post office authorities have discovered that dental equipment from Philadelphia, Boston and New York has been received here in the customs department of the local post office for years, but without any duty being paid. It is alleged that the amount of back duty at present represents at least $10,000.
A RELIABLE OFFER.
Honest Help Free To Men.
We are authorized to state by Carl Knapp, Second and Brady streets, Davenport, Iowa, that any man who is nervous and debilitated or who is suffering from any of the various troubles resulting from overwork, excess of abuse, such as nervous debility, exhausted vitality, lost vigor, unnatural drains and losses, lack of development, etc., can write to him in strict confidence and receive FREE OF CHARGE, full instructions how to be thoroughly cured.
Mr. Knapp himself was, for a long time, a sufferer from above troubles, and after trying in vain many advertised remedies, became almost entirely discouraged and hopeless. Finally he confided in an old clergyman, whose kind and honest advice enabled him to speedily obtain a perfect and permanent cure. Knowing to his own sorrow that so many poor sufferers are being imposed upon by unscrupulous quacks, Mr. Knapp considers it his duty, as an honest man, to give his fellow men the benefit of his experience and assist to a cure. Having nothing to sell, he asks for no money, the proud satisfaction of having done a great service to one in need, he rightly considers an ample reward for his trouble. If you write to Mr. Knapp, and follow his advice, you can rely upon being cured and receiving absolute secrecy as well.
Address as above, enclosing a stamp. No attention will be given to those writing out of idle curiosity, therefore state that you really need a cure.
