HER FATHER WAS A DRUNKARD
A Plucky Young Lady Takes on Herself to Cure Her Father of the Liquor Habit.

STORY OF HER SUCCESS.

A portion of her letter reads as follows:—
"My father had often promised mother to stop drinking and would do so for a time, but then returned to it stronger than ever. One day, after a terrible spree he said to me: 'It's no use, I can't stop drinking.' Our hearts seemed to turn to stone, and we decided to try the famous Serravallo's Prescription, which we had read about in the papers. We gave him the remedy, entirely without his knowledge, in his tea, coffee, or food regularly, according to directions, and he never knew he was taking it. One package removed all his desire for liquor, and he says it is now distasteful to him. His health and appetite are also wonderfully improved, and no one would know him for the same man. It is now fifteen months since we gave it to him and we feel sure that the change is for good. Please send me one of your little books, as I want to give it to a friend."

LIFE ON THE GRAND BANKS.
DRUGGERY AND PERIL THE BURDEN OF MEN'S LIVES.
A Man May Make Twelve Hundred Dollars in a Season—An Interesting Sketch.

F. T. McGrath, in Alaska's
The dories radiate from the schooner like the spokes from the hub of a wheel. The fishing gear consists of trawls—ropes several hundred feet long, to which, at intervals of a yard hooks are attached by smaller lines about two feet long. The trawls are submerged by anchors almost to the bottom, and there buoyed, the hooks having been previously baited with the smaller fishes which the greedy cod or voracious halibut, awaiting for the trawls to be hauled in, will promptly bolt. The trawls are set in the afternoon and remain undisturbed all night.

Once begun, the toil is incessant, and when the fishing is good, the men rarely ever sleep. Awakened at 2 a. m. to fill their bait "kicks" or tubs, they start at daybreak to lift these trawls and remove the over-night catch, hauling the hooks again. There are about 3,000 hooks to handle, and this often occupies until evening, when the boats row back. After unloading, the deck is piled high with the glittering mass of fish. The fishermen then stow it in the hold keeps them until midnight, when they snatch an hour or two of sleep. Some can go without sleep for a week, others will rub wet tobacco in their eyes, so that the pain keeps them awake a few hours longer. Others again will work till they drop from sheer exhaustion, and sleep as they lie, until aroused by comrades. A Chinese torture is to keep men without sleep, and "hanking" does this to an extent to satisfy even the most exacting restler. The men sleep in their underclothing; when above decks, they can suffer leave off their clothing, for the blankets it is rarely fine; mist and muck prevail, and the rigging and sails drip water always.

The process of preserving the catch varies with the season. In winter cod and halibut are large fish running from one hundred to three hundred and sometimes five hundred pounds. The entrails are removed and replaced with powdered ice, the fish being stored in ice-packed "pounds" in summer, halibut are gutted and salted or iced. Cod are packed in ice in winter; gutted and salted in summer. Halibut are very difficult to catch, owing to their size and strength. When fishing in the deepest water the process is easiest, as the fish are "drowned" from their struggles are reaching the surface. In shallower water, they are gannet, they often up, and a dory and the occupants meet a watery grave. If fishing is good a dory is soon filled. Overloading the boat is a frequent cause of disaster. Men pile them to the gunwale, and when they ship a sea and swamp. The occupants, if they can contrive, turn the skiff bottom up and clamber to it, where they remain until rescued or washed off by the seas or perish miserably. Henry Forrestal was last year in this plight with a comrade. The latter was weakening, and cried: "Don't let my body be lost." When he died and dropped off, Forrestal followed, caught the sinking body and threw it to the stern. Then, much exhausted, he carefully worked his way back on the precarious raft, where he spent the night. When rescued next morning he pointed to the body, exclaiming: "I didn't lose him," and dropped in a faint on the vessel's deck.

Trawling is continued until the ship is well filled. A halibut catch on the Grand Banks lasts about a month, and 50,000 to 100,000 pounds is a good fare. To take and salt 100,000 to 300,000 pounds of cod in a two months' trip is equally good work. Sometimes ill luck prolongs the venture indefinitely. The banker that was out one year from February 3rd till October 21st was an exception, but a four months' trip is not rare. The men share half the proceeds, sometimes making $1,200 apiece in a season. The personal interest they thus have in the vessel's success is a great incentive, and they will stand by her under all circumstances, almost until it is too late to escape from the yawning vortex she makes as she goes to the bottom, carrying with her the proceeds of a season's toil. They live well, as they need to, seeing the work they do and the hard-earned money they receive. The owners never stint their fare, knowing it is poor policy; and the men would not stand it if it were tried. Intoxicants are tabooed and the labor and endurance which can be generated on tea and coffee is a text for temperance orators. The French take liquor with them, and sometimes, when fishing is poor, boats from other vessels will board a French schooner for a spree. The men will fail to return, and an upper dory will be the only clue to their fate.

Found Three Ends.
When Capt. W. W. Snow, who recently retired from the Boston and Philadelphia line, after a continuous service of fifty-seven years, took command of his first vessel, an Irishman asked the captain if he could employ him.
"Well," said Capt. Snow, at the same time handing the man a piece of rope, "you can find three ends to this rope, you shall have work."
The Irishman thought a moment and then took hold of one end of the rope.
"There's one end, your honor," he said.
Then he took hold of the other end, and, showing it to the captain as before, said:
"And that's two ends, your honor."
Then taking hold of both ends of the rope he threw it overboard, saying:
"And there's an end to the rope, your honor, and that's three ends." Capt. Snow engaged him.

Will Be Very Popular.
Linen gowns both in white and colors promise to have great popularity this season. Blue, dull pink, green and beige are best choice in colors, and some embroidery in white, even if it is only on the waist, is the modish decoration, with the laces and stitched bands in addition.

FARM NOTES.

Things That The Farmer Ought to Remember.
To get the best results from feeding or grazing, it is necessary to give good attention to the comfort as well as feeding of the cow.
In coming to young crops, either for green or dry feeding, sweet corn should have a prominent place.
Next to a scant supply of food, nothing contracts to the milk of the dairy herd like cold.
Prof. Curtis says that the first step in providing the summer's feed supply should be to strengthen the pasture by sowing some grass seed over the bare places.
The American Sheep Breeder says that more sheep will be imported from England this year than for many years. It is hoped that a large percentage of the importations will come to Canada.
There are certain elements that go to constitute the gain of an animal that must be provided, and when they are so provided that they can constitute a well balanced ration, supplying the requirements, it is a profitable feed.
An American swine breeder says: Fallen fruit is an excellent appetizer for hogs, especially apples, and their fattening value in connection with grain is all right.
In the United States eggs will be high next summer; there is a shortage of poultry all over the country.
Damp houses and yards are runs are responsible for a goodly share of the ills that affect chicken flesh.
Breeding is an art that needs to be learned; it cannot be done successfully without previous preparation. A breeder should know a good many things and practice them before he can feel certain of success.
In growing swine the principal expense is the feed given.
The poultry business is different from all other businesses, and if properly conducted, will make a man wealthy in a very few years.
The fruit grower of to-day must have the ability of adapting himself to new methods, new fruits and new markets.

Every breeder and feeder is interested in securing the largest returns in pork from the feed consumed and the only way to do this results to be a balanced ration.
There is no question about the excellence of new whole milk for feeding young pigs, but it is doubtful whether there is profit in the business when pork is selling at $6 per hundred.
One pound of butter can be made from the quality of milk that would make a pound of pork.
Preparation of the land is an essential too often neglected.
The hen that is crop-bound had better be sent to the pot as soon as she recovers from an attack enough to be considered in good health. A bird that has developed a tendency of this kind is very likely to be troubled with it frequently. Such a bird should not be bred from, and is therefore good only for the table.
Foultry in confinement do not fatten as well or as quickly on grain as on mash. The birds require exercise to assist in grinding the whole grain. In France, where birds are fattened in close confinement, only soft food is used.

Doctor Said Incurable
Excruciating Pains in the Back and Loins—A Plaster Cast Necessary for Temporary Relief—How a Cure Was Found in
DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

We leave Mr. Deavers to describe his own case, as he writes it in a letter to us. Few human beings are ever called upon to suffer as he did from kidney disease. You cannot wonder at it that he is now enthusiastic in the praise of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They have given him a new lease of life.
S. O. Deavers, Conception Station, Labell county, Que., writes: "I am writing you in order that others who suffer as I did may profit by my experience. For three years I was obliged to give up all work on account of severe pains in my loins, back, and sides. I had become so stiff in my body that I could not lean over without suffering the most excruciating pain."
"I consulted several doctors and specialists, but all of them pronounced me incurable, and could not even give me relief. One had me encased in plaster in order to support the body, for I suffered dreadfully, but this only gave me temporary relief, and I thought myself condemned to die without being able to find a cure."
"About this time I received one of Dr. Chase's books, and found my case described exactly. The sample of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills which came with this book gave me marked relief, so I bought some more, and continued the treatment. Gradually the sharp pains in my back and sides grew less severe, and my bowels became regular and active—constipation had been one of my worst symptoms."
"I had also suffered from indigestion and gas on the stomach, pains between the shoulders, in the back, loins and sides, frequent desire to urinate and pain in making water, stiffness of the body, and all the sufferings accompanying derangements of the liver and kidneys."
"Since using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills these ailments have become less and less, until now they have entirely disappeared. I have great confidence in Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they have done so much for me that I cannot say enough in their praise. The people in this country are surprised to see me so well again, and no wonder, for my cure has been almost miraculous."

THE SMELL OF NEW YORK.
Describes The Characteristic Odors Of Great Cities.
New York Tribune.
"Did you ever smell New York?"
Sir Philip Burne-Jones, the painter of "The Vampire" and the son of the great pre-Raphaelite, propounds the question seriously. At first the question strikes one a little unpleasantly, perhaps, and then one answers with a grin: "Yes, certain sections of it."
"Ah, but I don't mean that, I mean the great blended odor of the entire city, that is found in every section and in every house—that is the smell of New York city, not of any of its parts. I am perfectly serious," the artist answers. Then, if one looks a little bewildered, he goes on to explain what he means, as he did the other day to a New Yorker whose nose is not so cosmopolitan as Sir Philip's.
"Let me first state what you have probably observed, if you have been in Europe," he said, "and what you have read about, anyway, London, Paris, Vienna, Venice, but most particularly London, where the peculiar odor, which one whose nose is sensitive to smells soon learns to know, and forever after associates with the cities, never for an instant confusing one with the other. The smell of London is particularly pungent, and rather unpleasant, due, I suppose, to the smoke. It reaches you always within a certain zone of the city, and does not leave you, wherever you go in the city, until your nose has become habituated to it. Several writers among them Henry James, if I am not mistaken, have observed it. The odor of Venice is again a distinct thing, not at all like either of the others. It has a peculiar flavor of the sea in it. But I have never yet seen any reference to the smell of New York, perhaps because your writers have always lived here, and so never noticed it."
"But I can assure you that New York has its own characteristic smell, and it is not London or Paris or Venice. As a stonemason came up the bay, out of the week's run in the Atlantic odor, my nostrils suddenly filled with an entirely new smell. It was like nothing I had ever smelled before—at least it was not the same thing I had ever smelled. I took a deep inhalation, and cried: 'Ah, a new sensation! Here is New York; I smell it; I shall always know it now.' And so far I have smelled the same odor in every part of the city that I have entered. It was in the Metropolitan opera house, it is here in my room in the Albemarle. But it is slowly fading. I shall get used to it in a week or two and notice it no more."
"What is your smell like?" the New Yorker asked.
"Well," said Sir Philip, "I can't describe it. It is not at all unpleasant, rather the opposite. It approximates a perfume, in fact. It is more like the smell of France than anything else I know—due to the clear atmosphere of both cities, the absence of smoke, I presume. I don't detect the salt water in it, though I presume it is there. Nor can one detect the odor of cooking, which must play a part in the final composition of this perfume that emanates from and saturates every part of your great, living city. If I cannot describe the odor, let some New Yorker take a long sea voyage and then return up New York bay with his nose awake. I am sure that he will then smell what I mean."
"My grandparents lived in New England," said the other man, thoughtfully, "and I recall vividly now that the village, and especially the houses in the village, had a smell that was all their own, and that I have never smelled anywhere else. I remember now that when I was a boy the mention of my grandmother's name or a picture of the old house always brought back that odor, pleasantly nasty, to my nose."
"Yes," said the artist, "every town has its characteristic smell, as well as its characteristic traits of architecture or conduct. I am going to Boston soon. I will watch for the New England smell."

No one knows better than those who have used Carter's Little Liver Pills what a relief they have given when taken for dyspepsia, indigestion, pain in the side, constipation, and disordered stomach.

IT CATCHES ME THERE, DOCTOR.

It makes men over again. It makes perfect men of the puniest, weakest specimens of "half-men." Give me one of those unfortunates with swollen and distorted joints. Give me a man with pains in his back, in his shoulders, hips and chest. I will pour the oil of life into his joints, warm them up, start the life blood circulating and remove his pains in a few days. My belt will cure him and fill him full of life and courage, and make him glad with the sunshine of youth. And it never burns or blisters.

CAUTION—Concerns selling old style, blistering belts are now offering a cheap imitation of my cushion electrodes. Refuse them. The best is the cheapest when you buy anything for your health. Call and see my famous appliance and test it free.

FREE BOOK—My new illustrated book tells about my Belt and how it cures the weakness of men and women. It is worth reading. I will send it, closely sealed, free, upon request. Call, if possible, and I will explain my Belt and what it will do. I will give a free test to every seeker of proof of what my belt does. Call or write to-day.

IT CATCHES ME THERE, DOCTOR.

What causes that dull ache—sometimes a stinging catch when I go to move? When I arise in the morning I can hardly straighten up. It exposes the fact that you are in bad shape, your strength has been over-taxed, your kidneys are breaking down. In fact you are abusing your health. Those pains you have—they are nature's warning cry. They warn you of the approach of lumbago, Bright's disease, sciatica, destruction of your vitality and many other troubles. They will tell you that something is wrong with your health, something that may lay you up and perhaps before you expect it. Don't you think it cheaper to cure them now before they make you helpless? I can cure you with nature's own remedy—Electricity. Every town and hamlet in the country to-day knows of its cures. Perhaps your neighbors are being cured by them. I want every one that is in need of a treatment to use my Electric Belt. If you can offer me reasonable security you can

PAY WHEN CURED.

My Electric Belt does wonders in a few applications. It arouses all the dormant energies, develops muscular and nerve life, and restores the feeling of youth, courage and manhood.

HIS MOTHER WAS IRISH.
Bond of Sympathy and Love Between Them.
"Kilkeny" in the Ottawa Journal writes thus of Marconi:
Marconi, famous to-day for perfecting the (apparently) impossible, is the son of a Dublin woman, formerly Miss Annie Jamison. Miss Jamison showed in her youth a natural taste and preference for music, and her father—a manufacturer of famous Irish whiskeys—having the means to do so, sent his daughter over to Italy to complete her musical studies. While there Miss Jamison met Giuseppe Marconi, married him afterwards and from this union of Irish-Italian was born one of the greatest scientists and inventors of the time.
We learn that Annie Jamison was a beautiful, adventuresome girl in her teens. Her family was well-to-do, and she had everything in the way of education and training that money could buy and Dublin could offer. Her father was the founder of the house so far as the business which still bears his name is concerned, but her ancestry extended back into the times of Scotland's greatest era and her forebears were people of influence and power.
Marconi's mother has been of more actual, though indirect help to him than could be told. She it was who encouraged him in his earliest efforts. The boy attended school altogether not more than three or four years. It fell to the lot of the mother, to teach him and from her he learned to speak the English language, to play the piano, and to get a start in the various accomplishments which mark him now as a many-sided man.
Between the mother and the son there is a strong bond of sympathy and genuine love. Marconi formerly accompanied his mother on her travels; now he takes her with him wherever he can. She spends about six months out of each year in England, living with him in London, when he is there, and going with him to one of his stations when his work takes him there.
