CHANGE IN POWER. "Now that the liberals have a majority in the upper chamber," says the Mail, "and can practically do as they please, the party press tells the country that the work of reform is complete." Oh no it does not. It tells the country that the machine has been smashed, and so its work is about complete. The conservative leader in the senate is not yet prepared to accept defeat. He figures up that if all his political friends and allies were in their places he would have a majority of two, and he expected to kick against the liberalizing of the senate committees. He was disappointed in this, but he does not yet consider that he is vanquished. There has to be a further leavening of the upper chamber with liberal sentiment before the reforms the Mail is eager for will come to pass. But they will come—all too soon for the conservative party. It used the senate as a registering machine in its days of power, and as an obstructive machine in its days of adversity. Any change from this will be unwelcome to it.

GLASGOW AND ITS POOR. The city of Glasgow is about to make another public experiment. It proposes the erection of suitable houses for the working classes. In great cities building sites are very expensive, and working men cannot afford to buy them nor rent the houses that are built upon them—within a certain radius of the business centres. Thus in some cities the labour element, for comfort, is driven into the suburbs of the city, and so far from the points of occupation as to require one to spend the time that should be his for rest or recreation in travelling to and from his work. If he live in the city proper it is in alleys and cellars and garrets, amid surroundings of the most wretched sort. Glasgow proposes to do for the thirty working men what they cannot do for themselves. In the spirit of paternalism which is becoming a characteristic of the Scotch people the Glasgow corporation proposes to house its industrious poor on a scale or plan that is peculiarly its own. It desires to borrow £750,000, and with the money build four hundred tenements, massive things, three stories high, well constructed and well ventilated, and possessing all the modern sanitary arrangements. This will at once provide accommodation for about two thousand families, and if the ideals aimed at be reached they can be duplicated in the near future. The scheme is capable of unlimited expansion. The venture might make some corporations hesitate, but Glasgow has been very progressive. It has led in Scotland in municipal ownership, it has made handsomely out of its lighting plants, and when a city supplies a man with his gas and water it is only another step to supply him with a decent house in which to live.

PLEA FOR INDEPENDENCE. "Blind adherence to any leader is a mistake; a bigoted acceptance of certain shibboleths instead of principles is mere folly. Social reforms at home, based on justice, and a true conception of liberty, a peaceful and peace-loving empire, based on self-government, should be written, not on a slate, but the more enduring material of a nation's heart."—From the London, Eng., Echo.

Unquestionably no sentiment could be more timely or patriotic. The whole tendency of party is to absolute despotism of leaders. This spirit had its birth in rash and extravagant government measures to carry which in England as in Canada it was necessary to use the government whip. Absolute submission was the command under conservative rule at Ottawa until the very force of power kept men silent and obedient. But endurance failed at last and then the great cleavage came. The example of that period has had a bad influence. Criticism of mere details of measures and administration, which ministers for their own safety and guidance as well as for public interests should invite, is looked upon as disloyalty to a great cause. It is the truest loyalty, since it makes for greater success and truer confidence, and the men who exercise it should be held in honor, not in contempt. Opposing parties work to destroy the politically independent spirit. If a word be spoken in criticism of a party by one of its adherents that word is picked up as a choice morsel on the other side, and hurled back as a reproach, a sign of division, a weapon for parliamentary goading. Is it a wonder, when a member, for instance, finds his well-meant criticism used as a personal whip upon him by the very man opposite who ought to sympathize with his intention? A great loss to a country is the strangling of free expression from its best elements.

HOLDING WHAT WE HAVE. F. C. Wade, who has been a government office in the Yukon district, complained in a speech, given in Toronto, that Canada is not taking care of the wealth that lies within her borders. The Klondike craze is over. That is the people are no longer rushing in without preparation for the conditions they must face. The value of the field for emigration as great as ever. The wealth taken out of the country has been enormous—$16,000,000 in gold in 1899, $22,000,000 in 1900, and $24,000,000 in 1901—and yet but fifty miles of the seven thousand creeks have been explored. In that far northern country of 198,000 square miles there is incalculable wealth and it will be unearthed and turned to good account as Canada wakes up to the consciousness of what it possesses.

Mr. Wade criticized the government because no one but the minister of the interior and three members of parliament visited the country to get an idea of its possibilities, or its wants. He blamed the opposition, and said they had done nothing. Holding up a Dawson daily, he said, while the Dawson press published Ontario news, and the American dailies gave great attention to this northern land, yet no Canadian paper had a responsible male correspondent on the spot. He blamed the manufacturers for not sending out travellers to discover the needs and the best way to supply it. He blamed the outfitters, who did not understand the way to supply the prospector as well as the American outfitters. He blamed the people who packed butter, and said, at Skaguay, he had seen four tons thrown overboard because it had been destroyed through bad packing.

He blamed the makers of ham. They did not cure their product so that it would keep. The manufacturers of canned goods made their tins too heavy. The makers of picks made their picks too heavy, while the shovels were either too short or too long. Canada, he said, was hunting for trade the world over, ransacking the antipodes, but neglecting the trade within her own doors. He would suggest as a reasonable solution that the government appoint an experienced man to go out there, find the needs, and then come back and tell the manufacturers his experience. If this did not carry he would have the Canadian manufacturers' association take it up. The advice is good. Canada is sending men abroad for information that will be of value, commercially, to its people. It ought to know about the home trade, and especially about that which the shrewd Yankee is meanwhile exploiting to his advantage. Mr. Wade, as Crown officer, may not be familiar with the details of trade, else he would be the one, with his experience, to engage in the work he regards as so important.

THE CONSERVATIVE NOMINEE. The conservative convention last night offered the nomination for the local house to J. Morgan Shaw. Others were suggested, but they all withdrew in Mr. Shaw's favour, so that he became the unanimous choice. The parties here are now in shape for the conflict when it comes, and from this time till its close the campaigning will be lively enough. Of one thing Mr. Shaw can rest assured—that the cause he espouses can and will, as it should, be discussed on its merits. He represents the conservative view on public questions, and presumably Mr. Whitney's view of them. If the convention endorses the leader it endorses all he says and does in connection with public affairs. The lines of demarcation between the parties will be clear enough, and the electors will have no occasion to hesitate as to what they will or should do under the circumstances.

The date of the election has not yet been set. It may be soon, and the sooner the better. This city is liberal, and will remain liberal if the party is as united as usual, and that there is the fullest assurance. The Ross government is entitled to its most enthusiastic support, and when the tocsin of war is sounded the liberal party will be prepared to enter the battle and add to its record of victories.

A TRIBUTE TO WORTH. The death of James Scott, in Toronto, revives the fact that he began life in Kingston, that his beginning was modest enough, that here he laid the foundation for future usefulness. His is another case in illustration of the truth that a man of energy and industry will eventually reach the plain or field wherein he can do the best service for himself and others. Mr. Scott was essentially a business man, with a mind for details, with a spirit of mastery which made for success in every avocation of life. He occupied various places of trust, but it was not until he became identified with the Georgian Bay lumber company that he displayed that grasp of intellect, that sagacity, insight or intuition, that marked him out as a manager of large capacity. He prospered because he put his soul into his engagements. He deserved the success that came his way. A man of varied attainments, of quiet dignity and deportment, he was qualified for many tasks he did not seek. For four years he was in the city council, and made his influence felt there, but he was not an ardent politician. Rather the place he liked was in the church, or the charitable institutions, in the service that sprang from pure benevolence and had its reward in the consciousness of duty well done. "We see little of the crushing poverty of the unfortunate in Toronto," says the Globe, "and we are apt to think that it is because conditions are somehow different here from those obtaining elsewhere. The truth is that the laborers of devoted men like James Scott are very largely instrumental in brightening the homeward road of those who under less happy circumstances would wear the garb of the workhouse and eat the bread of sorrow." That quiet tribute to unostentatious and to worth is better than columns of faint praise. The man who gives of his means, of his spirit, and of himself, towards a good cause, has a satisfaction and a reward that cannot be expressed in words.

HANGED AT EDMONTON. Guilty of the Murder of a Michigan Youth. Edmonton, N.W.T., March 26.—At Fort Saskatchewan, to-day, Charles Bullock is to be hanged for the murder of Leon Stainton in the Battle river country in April last. The dead youth, Leon Stainton, had left his home in Kalamazoo, Mich., to take a position with the Union Pacific railway at Aspen, Wyo. There he met Charles Bullock and a young man from his state of Michigan. Bullock's parents lived on a farm in the Battle river district of Alberta, N.W.T., and they had written to their son to come there and get land. Bullock asked Stainton, who was barely nineteen years old, to accompany him. When they left Aspen Bullock had $42 and Stainton $20. The two started together, but Bullock reached his home alone. He had plenty of money when he arrived, and gave his family $55 more than he had when he left Aspen. He stayed only three days, going away to British Columbia as he said. Instead he went to Montana and changed his name. Two months later a body was found half buried in a bluff near the Bullock farm. The body was identified as that of Stainton and after weeks of hard work, the police unravelled the whole story. A long search located Bullock at Great Falls, Montana, where he was arrested and brought back to Edmonton. A speedy trial resulted in his conviction, and the death sentence.

Summons Aid When Dog Falls Into a Well. Susquehanna, Pa., March 26.—Farmer Wainright, of Caserpool, has a pet goat and a pet puppy that are great friends. Together they ramble through the neighborhood during the goat's spare moments, when there are no oyster cans, door scrapers, or other edibles for it to nibble. The singular behaviour of the goat Sunday afternoon attracted the attention of the farmers. It ran to and fro, bleating pitiously, and seemed half-distracted. Some one suggested that the animal should be followed. The goat seemed to appreciate the fact that it was understood, and led the way to the rear of the yard, where the puppy was found in a pit ten feet deep, almost in its last struggles. The puppy was rescued and restored to the goat, which greeted it with fond caresses and bleated its thanks to the rescuers.

For Toronto Police Court. Toronto, To-day. Detective Burrows brought the man back from Kingston, but so far no confession has been made.
