AGRICULTURE IN CANADA.

HOW THE GOVERNMENT AIDS IN FARMING.

Export Products Last Year Increased in Value—Work at the Dairy Farm of Great Value.

The annual report of the minister of agriculture for the dominion of Canada, for the year ended October 31st last, is a budget of interesting matter, in which all the salient features of our national agricultural and horticultural products are portrayed. And how gratifying it is to be reminded that at the Pan-American exposition, in the competitions for live stock, Canada carried off an extraordinary number of prizes, much larger in proportion to the number of animals entered than the United States, which was the only other competitor, with the natural result of stimulating more than ever the trade in live stock between Canada and the United States.

In the section devoted to arts and agriculture, there is an instructive review of Canada's agricultural requirements, coupled with a not altogether exhaustive description of how they are being met. Cold storage, and its developments, naturally present a bold front in this volume, for next in importance to the production of foods for export, comes in natural sequence, the necessity for their preservation while waiting, as well as while actually in transit. The most fastidious grumbler could not find a peg in this regard on which to hang even the flimsiest of complaints. The honorable minister of agriculture has not wearied the reader with superfluous statistics; and with characteristic generosity he has not taken to himself all the credit for increased prosperity in his department of state, liberally crediting the officers of the department with the parts they have respectively taken in bringing about these excellent results.

The farmer views progress not only by enhanced production, but also by augmented profits; and under each of these headings he shows up well. The value of some Canadian farm products exported last year showed a phenomenal increase in volume compared with 1896, such as peas, which had risen from $1,299,491, in the latter year to $2,674,712 in 1901; flour, which had risen from $718,433 in 1896 to $4,015,226 last year; and oats which in 1896, amounted to $273,861, had risen in 1901 to $2,190,521.

In the butter trade the value of the exports in 1901 was $3,295,663, having increased from $1,052,089 in 1896, or over two hundred per cent., while from the port of Montreal alone the number of packages carried in cold storage increased from 227,863 in 1900 to 410,893 in 1901. Canadian butter is certainly winning a better relative place in the markets of the united kingdom than it has occupied at any previous period.

The bacon trade, also, manifested phenomenal progress. In 1896, the value of the export of pork, bacon, hams, etc., was only $4,446,884, whereas, at the close of the last fiscal year it had risen to $11,829,820.

In cheese, while in 1886, the exports valued $13,956,571, in 1900 they exceeded $19,800,000, and in 1901 reached $20,690,951. There has been a threatened falling off in the export of cheese this year; but it is expected that this will be more than counterbalanced during the current twelve months by the establishment of consolidated curing rooms.

It is satisfactory to learn that Canadian eggs are favored in Great Britain; and, as importers have distinctly stated how they can be successfully put at best rates on the English markets, Mr. Fisher has taken this opportunity of instructing poultry keepers how to prepare, pack and despatch.

The special fattening of chickens for old country markets has passed beyond the trial stage, and here, again the spirited enterprise of the minister has redounded to the profit of the poultry keeper.

Work at the experimental farm has been phenomenally prolific of information profitable to the dairyman, to the horticulturist, to the agriculturist, and to the poultry keeper, while researches in the entomological section have been of great service.

Some important chemical investigations are chronicled, and this division of the report is of special interest to Nova Scotia farmers residing on the borders of the Bay of Fundy.

The continued systematic testing of promising varities of agricultural crops obtainable in different parts of the world has placed Canadian farmers in the van as to knowledge of the best and most productive sorts of agricultural products. They have learned to observe the characteristic differences in varieties, and, their powers of observation thus awakened, they have been led to bring these faculties to bear on other problems in their business, to their individual advantage and profit. Their neighbors, in time, have become interested in this work, and have benefited thereby, and the good influence has thus been rapidly extending through all sections of the farming community. The new feature in the annual distribution of seed, introduced, under the instructions of the minister of agriculture, three years ago, has made this work increasingly beneficial. Under the new arrangement, larger samples than those hitherto sent have been forwarded, the seed sent out being sufficient for one-tenth of an acre. In this way the relative yield per acre of the varieties under trial has been ascertained and reported on by practical farmers in every agricultural constituency in the dominion.

Six Hundred Miles An Hour.

Nature Notes.

It is difficult to account for the enormous velocity of some birds' flight when migrating. The northern blue throat goes at the rate of 540 miles an hour, flying 4,800 miles from Egypt to Heligoland, in a spring flight of barely nine hours. Virginian plover fly from Labrador to North Brazil, 9,600 miles, without stopping, going at the rate of 636 miles in an hour, and probably more. How can this speed be attained? The birds resort to great heights, where the resistance of the air is slight.

THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL

Jolly Wind Sprite.

The wind's a jolly little sprite,
His merry tricks we see;
The leaves upon the trees he shakes,
Then scampers off in glee.

He makes the pretty flowers nod,
He turns the windmill round.
He whistles loud, or moans and groans,
Or breathes with whispering sound.

He whirls the smoke in chimney small,
He bends the green grass low,
He's here, we think, he's yonder now—
So swiftly does he go.

This funny little sprite, the wind,
We hear but cannot see,
Oh, there! He took that big man's hat
And hung it on the tree.
—Anna W. De Kay.

The Sun And North Wind.

A dispute once arose between the sun and the north wind as to which was the stronger of the two. Suddenly they saw a traveller coming down the road and the sun said:

"I see a way to decide our dispute, whichever of us can make that traveller take off his cloak, shall prove the stronger. You begin."

The north wind began to blow as hard as he could upon the traveller. But the harder he blew, the more closely did the traveller wrap his cloak round him, till at last the north wind having put forth all his strength in vain, had to give up in despair.

Then the sun, driving away the clouds that had gathered came out and shone in all his glory. He darted his most sultry beams upon the traveller, who soon found it too hot to walk with his cloak on; he flung it off and ran for protection to the nearest shade.

Teddy's Query.

One brother was tall and slim,
The other chubby and short.
Teddy sat looking at them one night,
Apparently lost in thought.

"Mamma," he asked at length,
"Which would you like best:
For me to grow north and south like Tom;
Or like Willie, from east to west?"

The Need Of The Kindergarten.

Many people say: "Why do we need the kindergarten?" We got along years without it." Yes, so we did, the same as we got along without electricity before its discovery, but our lives are not our own, and a child cannot be taught too early to learn that lesson of living for others. Again people say the kindergarten is all right for poor children, whose mothers have not the time to devote to their training; but a child needs other society than the mother, no matter how wise and good may be her training. If it be an only child it is apt to be over-indulged; or the younger, it is apt to have too much training from elder brothers and sisters, but a three hours' intercourse daily at the kindergarten gives a child associates of its kind, and it is taught consideration for others and to subordinate its will to the wishes of others. Then mother has often demands upon her by society, and I do not mean by this always fashionable society, but wholesome intercourse, which may take her outside of the home, when she must call in some one to assist in the care of the children. Too often the effect of a weak-minded, weak-willed nurse, who resorts to means of bribery and deception to manage him teaches the child to be untruthful and domineering. I do not claim that the kindergarten system is perfect. Often too much is expected, and it should be borne in mind that we have the child but three hours out of twenty-four, and it is the fault of the parents that the school system is not better. They have a right to know what their child is doing in the school and in the kindergarten. Often the school system is an enveloping and not a developing of ideas. Children should be taught to feel rightly. The will should be trained rightly and will training must be like other training for a child is only free as he is obedient, and it is so with us all; as we become obedient to the demands of duty we become free, and a little child can learn from effect back to cause. The schools must swing into line and follow up the work of the kindergarten to produce the best results. In measuring kindergarten work, we look for results too soon, for it is simply planting the germs that will develop and bear fruit later on; it is the foundation of character which we lay just as the workman has to do much under ground work in erecting a building.
—Mrs. Alice Whitney Putnam.

"Crucify Him!"

James Madison Williams in Onward.

At the bar of Pilate, bound,
Falsely tried, and marred and crowned,
Jesus meekly, dumbly stood,
Pleading with the multitude.
Vainly pled his sufferings,
Vainly look he more than king,
Loudly rose their bitter cry:
"Crucify him! Crucify!"

Him they hated without cause;
Loyal he to all their laws;
His a life of word and deed,
Sacrificed to human need.
Full his fellowship with God,
Right and true the path he trod;
Yet against him stormed the cry—
"Crucify him! Crucify!"

Break with sin, O brother! Break
For thy own and heaven's sake;
Arm against it, brother, arm,
Hate it, brother, fear and shun.
Sin defies the Holy One;
Join not, brother, in the cry:
"Crucify him! Crucify!"
