An Irish Romance.

When Henry Warren of Banbridge in Ulster, whose father was reputed to be a wealthy banker, was a stadent in Trinity college, Dublin. fell in love with Miss Maria Thompson. They were about to be married when Mr. Warren, sr., died. Then the Warren estate was found to be heavi ly in debt and young Warrem had to leave school to make his own way in the world. He vowed he would never marry till he paid his father's debts Miss Thompson concurred and years. Warren emigrated to states, was successful, and about a year ago paid off the last penny of his father's debts. Then he turned to saving money to marry on. Miss Thompson had not heard from him for years till about the middle of last month she received a cablegram from Morrestown, United States, as follows : "All debts paid ; coming home."
