They unanimously declare against the use of the bible as a text book in the schools, and by a majority of fiftyfour to forty-two they declared in ing of ethics, literature and history. It is instructive, in view of this declaration to look back and remember how good people were carried away by the howl about the mutilation of all other rubbish which is now consigned to the political lumber-room. Nobody cares about it now. Nobody seems to be afraid of Rome. The people who raised the cry and the honest people who were influenced by it are equally silent. And yet we suppose that for all time to come honest people will continue to be fooled by cries equally absurd or dishonest.

There are so many people to be provided for, and the accommodation within the abbey is not

It has leaked out that a number of young scions of noble family, in their anxiety to see the coronation of their majesties, had arranged to join the choir, while others made application for the privilege of acting as dummies in the orchestra.
