No Extension Of Time.

I Will Cure You of RHEUMATISM No Pay Until You Know It.

After 2,000 experiments, I have learned how to cure Rheumatism. Not to turn bony joints into flesh again; that is impossible. But I can cure the disease always, at any stage, and forever.

I ask for no money. Simply write me a postal and I will send you an order on your nearest druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure, for every druggist keeps it. Use it for a month, and if it does what I claim pay your druggist $5.50 for it. If it doesn't I will pay him myself.

I have no samples. Any medicine that can effect Rheumatism with but a few doses must be drugged to the verge of danger. I use no such drugs. It is folly to take them. You must get the disease out of the blood.

My remedy does that, even in the most difficult, obstinate cases. No matter how impossible this seems to you, I know it and I take the risk. I have cured tens of thousands of cases in this way, and my records show that 39 out of 40 who get those six bottles pay, and pay gladly. I have learned that people in general are honest with a physician who cures them. That is all I ask. If I fail I don't expect a penny from you.

Simply write me a postal card or letter. Let me send you an order for the medicine. Take it for a month, for it won't harm you anyway. If it cures, pay $5.50. I leave that entirely to you. I will mail you a book that tells how I do it.

Simply state name of your dealer and address Dr. Shoop, Box 40, Racine, Wis.

LETTERS FROM THE FRONT

KINGSTONIANS SERVING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Marrison Was In The Fight at Hart's River — A Soldier's Lot—Trooper Hawley Will See the War to a Finish.

A very interesting letter was received Monday, May 5th, from George Marrison, by his parents. George left with the second C.M.R., the contingent which received so much praise for good appearance, etc. Through the press I will give a brief outline of his last letter. George, besides being a favorite with those who came in contact with him, on account of his cheerful nature, had many friends of the animal kingdom. He had a great liking for horses. When G. W. Robinson had his herd of ponies, George, then a small boy, always helped to break them in and in their long trips beyond Napanee, George was always with the bunch. I mention this to show what kindness to animals will do.

George, in a previous letter, related how, after a forced march of 108 miles, tired and weary, man and horse were enjoying a rest. In a short time the order was given to continue the march. Many of the horses had broken loose, George's among the number. The contingent started on at a gallop, leaving George and a few others alone on the field. George called several times to his horse and was gratified to see it rush out of the adjoining bushes to him, and mounting his wise steed, he soon caught up with the rest. Several less fortunate came along later, stripped of everything but their boots.

In his letter of April 2nd, he refers to the engagement at Harts River, where Bruce Carruthers distinguished himself. They had just finished a march of fifty-five miles. Their horses were about played out and the order was given to camp for the night. They had just gotten their horses' lines down when all at once a roar like thunder fell on their ears, and shells began to fall in amongst them, tearing up earth and everything around.

The boys stood their ground like "bricks," merely bowing as the first shell went over their heads, as if to say, "Delarey, you have made a miss-this time."

The ... shelling the Canadians with the guns ... a short time ago. The fight lasted ... hours, and too much praise ... cannot be given the Canadians, for men and ... were the fagged out, had no supper and ... were the battle were ordered into the entrenchments for the night, and to add to their discomfort it rained all night and next day. But such is a soldier's life; such hardness makes the man.

The bullets came on thick and fast, while the fight lasted. George was one of twenty ordered to protect the big gun. A Kaffir was shot dead about two yards from him, and a comrade named Couper shot in the thigh. George's much loved horse received a bullet which ended his career. ... off and his horse killed under him.

A bullet whizzed past George, and tore a lot of bark off a tree beside him. The ground was torn up all around them. The squad under Bruce Carruthers suffered most, having nine killed, and it was a sad sight, never to be forgotten, to see their comrades lowered into the ground.

A sergeant lying in the trench beside George, raised his rifle, and at the same moment received a bullet in the chin. It was reported in camp that Delarey said, after the battle, had he known it was the Canadians he would not have made the attack.

When the Pom-Poms were turned on them, you could see horses and riders go up in the air. They did terrible execution. The Boers lost heavily. The Red Cross waggons were kept busy for a long time collecting the dead and wounded.

The boys are kept on the move, are getting hardened to their work, and are in good spirits. Although they have had some very close shaves, they have all got good, large beards, and are not the same looking Johnnies who left Halifax.—AMICUS.

Will See The War Through.

Harry M. Hawley, manager of Stroud's tea store, Princess street, has received a letter from his brother, William H. Hawley, formerly a conductor with the Kingston street railway company. Mr. Hawley wrote from Modderfontein, South Africa, where he was then spending a few days. He is a member of the 118th Imperial yeomanry. In that body was one other Canadian, trooper Slater, of Vancouver. The two Canadians mess together. Mr. Hawley was well, and stated that he had gone through many lively scraps. He expected to be home by Christmas, or whenever the war came to an end. He previously served for a year with the Prince of Wales Light Horse, a fine body of troops, that were raised in South Africa. Mr. Hawley, with true, soldier-like pluck, intends to see the war through to the end.

Prince And Princess Of Wales.

London, May 7.—The prince and princess of Wales have gone to North Wales for a week's visit. Until Monday they are to be the guests of Mr. Assheton-Smith at Vaenol Park. Friday the prince will be installed as chancellor of the university of Wales and the occasion will be marked by interesting ceremonies. Next week his royal highness is to preside at the opening of the electric railway to the summit of the Great Orme and later he will open the Alexandra hospital at Rhyl, in which the king and queen have taken a great interest for many years. At Rhyl, it is interesting to note, their royal highnesses will be within sight of the ruined castle of Rhuddlan, where, according to tradition, the first prince of Wales was presented to the Welsh chieftains by king Edward II., as their future prince.

Mrs. Nathan Baxter, Brockville, died on Monday, aged eighty-four years. Deceased was born at Mallorytown and spent most of her early life in Lyn.

At the Almonte knitting mill Peter Miller got his hand caught in a picker. It was terribly lacerated.

MUSIC AS A POWER.

Written for the Whig by Miss Rose A. Braniff.

The onward march in the progression of music, since its very infancy, has been one almost without retrogression of any kind, until now we find it a potent factor in the life of every nation and people on the surface of the globe. It would seem this must have been a pre-arranged plan in the order of the creation because every human being coming into this world has more or less of music in his soul, and it is one of our earliest impulses. This is evident in the infant almost from the beginning. Note how a gentle tattoo, or the low hum of a song, will catch and hold his interest when all other devices have failed to amuse him. From this we find that invariably there is innate in the child a certain appreciation of rhythm and motion. Later on we notice that the playthings doing best service are the ones that give out some kind of sound, and finally, when he begins to look about on his own account, observe the effect upon him of a sudden outburst of music from a passing band. His little comrades, his playthings, and even his dinner will be forgotten in his eager endeavor to reach the street and no contra-attraction will have any influence over him for the time being. This proves the power of music upon the young life, and it is a well-known fact that this power never wanes. On the contrary, it has been proven that its influence upon the soul is so far-reaching that crime has been wonderfully lessened in the larger cities where good music has been provided for the free entertainment of the masses. Beautiful parks, with their chains of lakes, fine drives, profusion of flowers, and afternoon band concert, have taken no small part in the work of diminishing the barbaric element among the populace.

Good band music should be encouraged, and every town should be proud to be able to claim one or more of those splendid organizations, and should be glad to lend thereto a hearty support under all circumstances. Bands should be seen in public as often as possible, and their excellent music, effective costume, accurate stepping, etc., can do much toward imbuing the youth with better, higher, and nobler instincts, and so the seed of good purpose may be sown. Cheap and trashy music should be tabooed by all those doing public work and, as far as possible, that which tends toward the classical should be encouraged. It is only in this way a public can become an educated public, where the subject of music is in question. All tendencies should lead upward, not downward; the musician must not come to people vile, but must bring the ... There are ... him in this regard. ... form, however ... when music in any ... preciated, because ... should not be de... circumstances any ... under the existing ... better than none. ... of it will be ... that which is furnished by ... example ... fore much despised street or ... hereto... piano. Will anyone doubt that ... or instruments have their domain in the world of music and are a power for good after their own fashion? Let us consider for a moment what the street piano can do and does for the children of the poor in our overcrowded cities. Its advent into their midst as the herald of approaching spring after a long, hard winter of close confinement in foul apartments with scant allowance of food, heat and clothing, is a source of untold gladness to their young hearts. They realize immediately that the season is at hand when they will be able to free themselves of their wretched environments and get out into the beautiful sunshine and fresh air for play with their companions, and they are simply jubilant. Their little feet are quickened into all manner of manoeuvre while they give evidence of their joy in merry laughter and clapping of hands, and their innocent games are indulged in to the time of the music. Who will say this has not been worth the while? Nor does the benefit to humanity cease here, for many a worn and exhausted mother who is perhaps on the very verge of discouragement, finds comfort, relief, and new hope while listening to those welcome strains as they find their way into her close and ill-ventilated quarters. During the hot and oppressive days of a long season of heat, her only respite from the weary struggle with want and privation will be the relaxation that will come to her mind and nerves while under the influence of the melody that floats upon a cool evening breeze from the "street piano," across the way. It is not unusual to hear such strains as the "Intermezzo" given in good style from one of those instruments ... so that they are not entirely without dignity; and we may feel assured that when music finds its way to the alley and tenement districts of a big city it has indeed fulfilled a mission of mercy no matter how humble may have been its garb.

In the homes of the more fortunate also, music has its work to perform and where pianos cannot be had some other instrument should be provided. A mandolin, guitar, or flute can do much toward making home the "dearest spot on earth."

In our schools we find music playing a prominent part in the formation of character and its refining influences are felt everywhere in the social circle. In our churches we find it doing double duty. Besides being an important item in the actual service we find it attracting tepid and indifferent souls, lifting them out of themselves and preparing them for the higher influences of ceremony and sermon. Again in our funeral service we find it contributing solemnity, so that from the cradle to the grave music must ever be for us an absolute need as well as one of the greatest delights afforded us during this more or less turbulent voyage of ours across the ocean of life.

The Fisheries Conference.

Ottawa, May 7.—It is likely that the conference between the provincial premiers and the minister of marine and fisheries, in connection with the control of fisheries, will take place about May 20th, before the premiers and the ministers leave for the coronation.

The 13th regiment, Hamilton, will visit Peterboro on May 26th, the Peterboro council voting $500 for their entertainment.
