CAPTURING THE POLLS.

An Attempt Will Be Made by the Conservatives

Hon. Mr. Davis has warned ing day. It is to poll the conservatives votes as early as possible, pecially the newly registered vote and then by the perverseness of the scrutineers create sufficient delay to prevent the polling of the full liberal vote. This is not a brilliant conception. The liberals are not likely to be idle when the conservatives are busy, and they will not be the slower in their gait now that the plan of the enemy has been revealed. The real significance of the talk about a vigilance committee is apparent. The idea is to take possession of the polls as far as possible, and terrorize the liberal voters. It will not succeed

A Strange Interview.

London Chronicle It was at his ount's house, as los Dufferin has a thousand times recount ed, that lord Melbourne met Disrael for the first time. Those were early days, and Disraeli, bursting with am bition, had been unsuccessful in his at tempt to enter parliament. After lis tening to his expression of disappoint ment, lord Melbourne said good na turedly: "Well, now, tell me, what you want to be?" "I want to prime minister," was the reply. Lore Melbourne, who did not expect a that time to be premier himself, re plied with an excessive seriousness "No chance of that in our time, No body can compete with Stanley when lord Grey gives up." So went on with repeated insistence the man who was to be prime minister in a fer months, addressing him who was to hold the saufe rank in thirty-five years, and who alone out of all list of Victoria's prime ministers was to hold a yet higher place in the personal estimation of the queen.
