The members are as good union men as any, but the machinists secured president Gompers and Mr. Flett's action against them by a series of lies and misrepresentations. Gomper's action was upon two statements made by the machinists that were untrue. The strike was not against low wages, long hours and compulsory piece work as stated; neither was Hayward discharged because of an agreement which the machinists presented to the company; neither did Mr. Graham immediately take his place. Mr. Flett begged the machinists to withdraw from their position and settle the matter by taking Graham into their union, They refused. The whole matter was
