A COMMERCIAL CONFERENCE.

Prominent Canadians Meeting In Toronto.

Toronto, June 4.—Delegates from every important board of trade and chamber of commerce in Canada were present this morning at the opening session of the conference of the commercial interests of the dominion. A. E. Ames, of Toronto board of trade, in calling the conference to order, said it was a natural preliminary discussion to that which would be held this summer in London between statesmen from all the colonies in regard to imperial trade relations.

Canada had no reason to complain of her place in the empire. No element of greatness was lacking.

Speaking for a moment of the Boer war, Mr. Ames said the Boers were now few fellow subjects, and would ere long be proud of the empire. The present conference was not intended to usurp the functions of parliament, but to express the views of business men on questions of trade and commerce and matters relating to the national welfare.

On motion of Alexander McFee, Montreal, Mr. Ames appointed a resolution was on motion of W. F. Cookshutt, Brantford, passed expressing unbounded satisfaction at the return of peace and the hope that it would abide during the king's reign. The members rose and sang "God Save the King," after which the notices on the order paper were taken up.

Capt. John Gaskin, Kingston board of trade, moved that the motion of Mr. Ames be amended so as to include between Canada and the mother land be reduced to the same figure as the domestic rate. This was agreed to without debate.

The resolution of the Montreal board of trade, affirming that Great Britain can best serve the interests of the empire by giving the products of her colonies a preference in her markets as against the products of foreign countries, was brought up by George E. Drummond, second vice-president. In moving this Mr. Drummond said the Montreal business men, in presenting this, was too loyal to be moved by the thought of immediate gain. The benefit to Great Britain by freeing her from dependence on foreign food supplies would be very great. The country was strongly wedded to free trade, but Englishmen would see that the best way of teaching the virtues of free trade would be to give other nations a taste of their own medicine. Last year only sixteen and two-thirds per cent of Great Britain's food imports came from her colonies, and it would greatly strengthen the empire to send the overflow population of the British isles to the colonies to grow food stuffs for those remaining at home.

Mr. Cookshutt seconded the motion which is still under debate.

UP-TO-DATE BURGLARY.

Location and Capture of an Inestimable Treasure. Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Hush! I saw the dog." The man on the outside lifted the dog through the window, and then noiselessly clambered after it.

"I have it fixed in my mind," replied the second man. "We pass to the right and ascend the stairs to the kitchen. Hush! Keep the dog quiet. Put on your mask and get your gun ready."

The two men, the one in the rear bearing the dog, lightly covered the distance to the stairs, and noiselessly ascended. Then they halted.

"We'll start the dog on the second here," whispered the second man. "Don't let him whine."

The first man knelt on the floor and put the dog down.

"Quiet, Rover, quiet!" The dog sniffed at the flooring, heeled a second, and then slowly moved forward, the men closely following him. He led them through the pantry and the china closet, his nose close to the floor and his tail quivering. Then he led them through the dining-room, and the breakfast room, and the library. A large safe filled an alcove amid the rows of books, but the burglars did not pause.

Straight into the drawing room the dog led them, his pace suddenly quickening, and then he stopped with his paws softly clicking against the glass doors of a mahogany cabinet.

"I felt sure you'd try to hide it," softly chuckled the second man. "That's why I brought the dog to scent it out."

The first man opened the door, and, reaching inside, drew out something wrapped in brown paper, from behind a row of oriental vases. Hugging it close, the first man led the little party of marauders back to the open window and out into the street.

When they reached a dark angle of the wall they paused.

"Say, let's have a look at it," murmured the second man with an ecstatic grimace.
