A DIGGER.

Period-The Differences Of The Street Railway Men.

Toronto, June 16 .- Louis P. Bailey, another of the street railway conductors, charged with robbing fare boxes was, this morning, committed for trial on the evidence of Pinkerton detective Caulfield. Caulfield swore that he saw Bailey take money out of a fare box with a "digger," also that on May 21st, Bailey told him he had a good day and got about twenty tickets. He, Caulfield, under cross-examination, admitted that he had a 'digger' for the extraction of fares and had pretended to use it, but declared he had never taken anything out with it. The men threaten to have Caulfield arrested for participa-

General manager Keating and committee of the street railway ployees went into conference early this morning and discussed the diffences between the company and the men at great length. The men did not go as representatives of the union but it was stated in advance that they had been instructed to present once again the demand twice rejected by the company for recognition of the union. Mr. Keating refused to recognize the committee as one represent ing all the men, non-union as well as union, and said the company was will ing to e gage a hall to night for a meeting a, which all could be present The men, ah r consultation, decided to go on with their union meeting tonight and claim that 900 men out of the 1,000 employees will attend it. T. C. Robinette, counsel for Fred Lee Rice, the murder of county constable Boyd, visited the prisoner at the jail and informed him of the supreme court's decision. Rice took the intelligence stoically. "Too bad, but it can't be helped," was all he said A very close watch is being kept He is still hopeful that the minister of justice will commute his sentence
