

OURSELVES.

AS SEEN FROM MARS.

What peculiar little people those mortals are down there on old Mother Earth. See how they rush about! Those with pants on are men. They come out of their little houses every morning to go to a place, and run along the same road every day as if they never would be there in time. The funny part is that when they get there, some of them do nothing but scratch a little piece of steel on paper making black marks, others count green pieces of paper, and the more of this paper they have the happier they seem. In the evening, back they hurry along the same road again to their little houses. They do this day after day, and they don't seem ever to weary.

Look into that room; there are a number of women whose hands are not rough, whose clothing is whiter than the rest, and wears longer; they save not old before their time. They have taken time to think, and have realized that it made all the difference to their hands, their clothes, and their work, whether that buff material was pure or impure. Some of these little women, when they want some of that buff material they use so much of, simply hurry to or send some one to a shop and ask for soap. Those who think and know the difference ask for "Sunlight Soap." They know Sunlight Soap is pure. See, there is one of the thinking women in that shop—that little man has given her some of that buff material instead of "Sunlight Soap." See her pushing it back and say, "I'll have nothing else but Sunlight Soap, octagon bar."

KIDNAPPING INCREASING.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE FALLING AWAY IN NEW YORK.

The Summer Season Has Begun and New Yorkers Are Off to the Cool Retreats—The Coronation of King Edward VII. (Special Correspondence, Letter 1,309.) New York, June 20.—A few years ago a leading lady in the city of Brooklyn, desiring to keep penance during the season of Lent, requested her maid to stop at the fish market and order some halibut for dinner. "About how much will you require?" inquired the fish man. "Oh, about three or four will be enough. Our family is not very large," she said. "I will have it sent to my home, and order some halibut for dinner."

able fortune at the time his boy was kidnapped. He spent his fortune, and crossed the Atlantic following every clue that gave him a possible hope of recovery of his boy, and though assisted by thousands he never saw his child again, and with the boy's mother died of a broken heart.

For several years there was a cessation of the diabolical crime of kidnapping until one day about five years ago the son of a prominent citizen of Albany was raised in the middle of the afternoon and consigned in a lonely house in the woods only a few miles from Albany. A ransom of several thousand dollars was asked. The refusal of the demand insured the boy's death. Among the numerous pursuers who sought to discover the kidnappers' trail was a sharp newspaper reporter. His sight was keen and his hearing phenomenal, and it was not very long until he ran down the kidnapper and recovered the boy. He was carried in triumph all around the city to assure the people he was still alive and safe. The return of the boy assumed the character of a child in Central Park, by a conspiracy with the kidnapper, who was finally restored to his parents without serious loss. The great sensation of the week, however, has been the attempted assassination of one count for more than two hours he lay in his native land and who has been followed by murderous thugs from Spain to the United States to induce him to sign papers renouncing all claims to his family under penalty of death. He was struck down at midnight while in the act of opening his own door; then dragged to a carriage and taken to a railroad on the verge of the city and tied fast to the rails, where he lay for hours he lay in the horrible anticipation of being ground to pieces by some approaching train. He was not aware that no trains were run at night on that section of the road, but the terror he saw the danger, and was not enough to unseat his reason. He was finally rescued from his perilous position by some parties who heard his cry for help.

KISSING THE BOOK.

Relic of the Time When Kissing Was General in England.

London Letter. Sir Francis Jeune and Justice Gorell Barnes have had posted outside the two courts of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division notices to witnesses calling their attention to the fact that they may be sworn in the Scottish manner before giving evidence. This is to say, they may be sworn with uplifted hand, repeating a solemn invocation to the Deity, instead of taking a book and kissing it, after listening to a form repeated by a minor official of the court. The notice, which we refer to repeatedly outside one of the courts of the charter division, and we have every hope that it may become universal. We have for many years contended that the oath by kissing a book has nothing to commend it while it is nasty and may become a means of propagation of disease, and we have seen with regret that the statutory permission to swear in the Scotch fashion was, as a rule, not known by witnesses, and frequently, also, that judges, coroners and magistrates were ignorant of it.

THE CHURCH SOLO.

Bishop Dumoulin Condemns It In the Synod.

Bishop Dumoulin, in his charge at the opening of the Niagara synod, thus spoke: "I take occasion here to refer to a very odd departure from church order which has established itself all over the land. The church, in her wisdom, has prescribed that the priest shall begin the offertory by saying one or more certain sentences, most appropriate in their appeals to the consciousness of the worshippers. The riches of holy scripture are unfolded in these. Nothing more appropriate and altogether effective could have been designed to suit the solemn occasion. Instead of this excellent way, what is the prevailing practice? The clergyman is content to say one text: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify in you who are in the heaven above." and of such stands forth and sings to the congregation a selection not found in bible or prayer book, or hymn book—some dreary song, most inappropriate to the occasion, mayhap, and of such length as to keep bishop, clergy, sidesmen and congregation all waiting till it pleases the singer to desist. I have endured these performances at times without being able to distinguish more than a word here and there of the anthem, or song, and I have felt sorry, indeed, that such a substitution should be so generally made for the church's elevated instruction and useful order. I have little doubt that this has its effect upon the inclinations of our people to give, as it certainly would have upon my own, and I cannot resist the strong feeling which is being able to distinguish and heavenly words of Christ and His apostles, arranged by the church for that purpose, would move more our congregations to give than the rapid phrases of some poorly rendered selection."

A One-Sided Battle.

If attacked by a wild beast a man would try and defend himself. If afflicted with rheumatism he fights the disease. With Dr. Hall's Rheumatic Cure the battle is all one-sided. Eight bottles of Dr. Hall's with Ch-max Iron Tonic Pills, affected a permanent cure. This great blood purifier is put up in bottles containing ten days' treatment. Already the great ocean is allotted out to a few men; an ingenious inventor, with his submarine destroyer crawls along the bottom of the sea, while J. Pierpont Morgan floats a few hundred feet above him on the surface and puts up the toll gates on every foot of his claim, along which this note may be seen: "Intruders beware, no admittance except on business; look out for the savage dog, beware of mantrap and spring guns." I have had occasion during the last few months to caution my readers against these. They come in such alluring shapes that it is almost impossible to resist temptation. Where you knock the head of one trust the head of a dozen new villains spring up to supply the place of one you have destroyed. About this fish trust there is a shameless crime; it is not long since I recorded the destruction of nearly forty barrels of decayed fish to keep the price up in the market and to virtually exclude it from the wholesome supply of the poor man. Whatever excuse there may be for a food trust on land where wheat goes up to double its former value, where cattle are raised to meet the beef demand of the eastern market, where coal is garnered from the mines where the Almighty planted it millions and millions of years ago. Expensive plants are necessary to secure these hidden treasures; the lives are thousands are sacrificed every year to secure them, but the fish of the ocean need no guardian either in the polar seas or under the equator. The Almighty has given these mighty herds a instinct which guides them to the poor man's door, and in the moment of his extremest want comes a trust to claim the mighty ocean peculiarly his own. He drives the poor man back and demands a mighty price for the fish of the town, and are serving the best of this store ever knew. Roche's old stand. E. C. Mitchell.
