CLOSE PRINTING HOUSES.

The Latest Order By The Sultan of Turkey. London, June 23,-Constantinople is the sultan's system of terrorism. There are stories of further plots within the army. It is asserted on Viennese authority, that the sultan has prohibit ed the issue of any more books in the Turkish language, thus closing the doors of many printing establishments. The sultan, it appears, is of the opinion that there are enough books in existence, and that those who want to indulge themselves in reading can read old ones. The object of the order is, of course, to suppress the circulation of seditious literature. The effect will be to make that literature more dangerous, as the authors of secret lithographed pamphlets, circulated as letters, will use language which Senter would dare to print

Mason Phelan Returns From Texas On a Visit.

Over forty years ago Mason Phelan left Kingston for the United States, and until last week he had never returned to visit his native land. On -Notes From All Over-Little Friday, he came back, spent a day or so in the limestone city, and then left for Picton, Yarker and Napanes to visit the friends of his boyhood days or such of them as have not passed to the great beyond during his long

Mr. Phelan says that he can well remember the cold winter's day on which they drove across the ice from Kingston introduction to Horace Greeley, who was then prominent in many phases of American life, to A. T. Stewart, the millionaire dry goods merchant, and to other prominent Americans i the New England cities. They visited in New York some time. Then Mr Merrill returned home, and Mr. Phel in continued his travels throughout all the western states. Finally he located in Texas, where he opened a large foundry, which he has since successfully managed.

And now after forty years of ab sence he has returned to visit the friends and scenes of his earlier days. But a vast change has taken place since then, and it is doubtful if he would know any of the cities, towns or villages he knew when a boy. He did not recognize Kingston, so great had been the change, but he was more than delighted with the progress the old city had made. When he left Canda Deseronto consisted only of a little wharf, an hotel and one or two small frame buildings. It was called Indian Mills in those days. Mr. Phelan has gone to Yarker to visit a relative of Mrs. Connoly, whose husband once conducted the mills there. has friends in Napanee, Picton and other points, whom he will also visit.
