USING IN USEFULNESS. The London Advertiser disagrees with the Whig when it says that the church is slow to recognize the ability of the young minister.

"A brilliant lawyer or a doctor may wait years for a profitable practice," says our contemporary, "but a preacher has the opportunity of exercising his talents at the very outset of his career, and if he shows exceptional gifts his reputation is immediately made."

The young cleric, as a rule, regardless of his intellectual power and scholarship, is sent into the mission field and he may there spend much of his sweetness on the desert air. Occasionally he gets early recognition, and receives a call or an invitation to a city church, but it is only occasionally.

The lawyer and the doctor can locate where they please, and if they are clever they soon make a practice. The preacher has to go where he is sent, with most of the denationalized, and the elders see that he does not rise too quickly.

A JOURNALIST IN TROUBLE. The publisher of the Klondyke Miner, Mr. Clark, has got himself into a heap of trouble. He was somewhat more sensational than Dawson City could stand.

He took a dislike to the officers of the government and abused them. The fact that he was acting recklessly became apparent as the advertisers, one after another, withdrew their support. In consequence of this he had, as one paper puts it, "more room for denunciation," and he required it all.

The culmination of his recklessness came presently. He undertook to wipe out all gambling. He was now a moral reformer. One raid on certain places he did plan, with the help of the mounted police. He made several arrests, but no convictions. He could not get the police to help him again, so he undertook to tell all he knew, and more, in his newspaper.

In a letter of some length Mr. Clark announced that eight gambling houses were paying $400 a month for protection, and that this money, less $600, went to officials whom he did not name. A copy of this letter he addressed to all the officials, however, having to do with the administration of civic affairs and justice, and he added: "One word from any one of you to stop the bribery. If you are not guilty, or fixed, I demand that you show the world that you are law respecting Canadians and officials, and that the gambling be closed permanently, inside of the next twelve hours."

The Montreal Gazette says Clark will receive his reward in time. He certainly will. He is up against several officials for criminal libel, the result of which will probably convert him into a martyr. He felt that he should go further than usual in stirring up the people, but he went too far and stirred up some people too much for his own good.

A BLOW TO GAMBLING. The gamblers who staked large sums upon the events of coronation week have met with a great reverse. There is no means of computing the vast sums that have been invested in one scheme and another.

The favorite form of speculation is called insurance. The merchants, the trades people, the humbler investors in coronation equipment, got the guarantee of Lloyds, an insurance institution, that the event was sure to come off. If it did not they were to be recompensed to any extent, for which they were, according to fixed tariffs, able to pay. The Lloyds charged three per cent., a seemingly large premium, but not so large in view of the risk which it involved.

The fees collected for such a kind of insurance must have totalled an enormous sum, but it will be a mere bagatelle in comparison with the claims which will soon be presented. The huge gamble may be the means of sending into bankruptcy some of the companies that have been feeding and fattening upon the people. They have had their reverses heretofore. Everything they guaranteed cannot come to pass. All that is available will go astray occasionally in spite of the best laid plans. The gamblers must, indeed, figure on giving away or losing some of their money, in order to cultivate the larger investment of it.

Generally the business has been a very profitable one, for some of the companies and syndicates were becoming rich and ambitious. The illness of the king comes to them, however, as an unparalleled misaster. It will improve them, and go far toward giving a death blow to one of the commonest and lowest forms of speculation, that which is associated with the movements, the acts, the lives of men and women.

POLITICS VS. LABOUR.

In the parlance of the street Ald. King, the chairman of the water works committee, has been thrown down by his party. His reverse is due to the inordinate disposition of the conservatives to submit all civic appointments to the partisan test.

The election being over it was in order to select an assistant to the water works engineer, one who would do night duty and give the city the protection which a full reservoir affords. The conservatives selected their man, and it was assumed that who ever the caucus endorsed was as good as appointed.

But there are some aldermen who have the fear of the electors before their eyes, and some of these dropped the party in the last hour and in Ald. King's extremity. The labour union made a demonstration to some purpose, when they created a panic on the conservative side of the house and caused the late split.

Ald. King made a couple of tactical mistakes. His first was the introduction of the report of his committee. He so forced it upon the table. Once there he lost control of it, and he was angered to see his party help on the disturbance which ended in the abandonment of his man. His second mistake was in attacking the people who were the cause of his undoing. It was a case of diamond cut diamond.

The conservatives, through Ald. King, wanted a man who has pre-eminently a conservative. The labour men wanted a man who was pre-eminently a representative of their class. The labour men won.

Perhaps the council will now be cured of the habit of putting politics before everything else. The thing has been seen heretofore only in the appointment of committees. But all this year politics have been the issue of the hour, and the aldermen who liked them most seem to have had nearly enough of them. In their discomfiture they are denied the sympathy of their political friends.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

The serious illness of the king, on the eve of his coronation, and during the initial stages of the great event, is a matter of profound regret. The disappointment will be keener, vaster, profounder, in its results than words can express.

All was made ready for the occasion. The world's representatives were in London, and the great city was the centre of attraction, of pomp, power and display. The preparations for the week, and its incidents, involved the expenditure of millions, and nothing imaginable could intercept and end all the pageantry like the thing that has happened.

Edward VII. has been feeling unwell for days. His practical withdrawal from public view was misunderstood and misreported. His retreat had to be accounted for in some way. Hence the talk of a conspiracy to take his life, absurd and untimely though it was; hence the inferences on the cause of his illness, inference so varied and contradictory as to be lightly discussed; hence the significant hints of physical disability, which were, unfortunately, too well founded. The entry of London by the king and queen was made under trying circumstances, and his majesty evidently looked and acted the part that was not in harmony with his condition.

The illness of the king must be seriously regarded. An operation upon one at his age, and at this time must be attended with great anxiety. Life itself may be in danger, and so the empire does well in suspending its rejoicings to wait, with intense solicitude, for the evidences of returning vitality. The coronation, with all its gold and artistic accompaniments, is of secondary importance, while the sovereign is laid aside by illness. He will be buoyed up, however, by the devotions of his subjects, whose prayer will be more intense and earnest than ever. "God Save the King."

EDITORIAL NOTES. Rioting in Toronto on Sunday. It can no longer be called "Toronto the good."

Mr. Whitney is said to be well. His coronation will go on at Toronto, tomorrow, according to arrangement.

Rev. J. A. Macdonald and Dr. Herdridge are suggested as successors to Principal Grant, in Queen's college. Both are bright, active, busy men, and of the class from which the right man must come.

The press of Toronto is of opinion that the Toronto street railway strike was unnecessary. The mayor's call out of troops was especially expensive. The city will be out from $5,000 to $10,000 by that act.

The general feeling is that the Toronto Street Railway when it meant to compromise with its employees should have done so without strike and disturbances. Its negotiations were not carried on in a conciliatory spirit.

The chances are that Ald. King would like to withdraw his Monday evening's speech in the city council. He realizes now how true it is that he is a wise man who knows when to speak and when to hold his peace.

WAS MARRIED IN TORONTO

A NAPANEEN WEDS A LADY FROM THE WEST.

To Reside in Napane—Fire at the B. of Q. Railway Sheds—Returned From the Great North-West—Notes About People.

Napane, June 25.—A pretty wedding took place at 21 Alexander street, Toronto, when Ethel Louise, youngest daughter of Mrs. Ruth Scott, was married to Aylesworth G. Sills, Napane. The ceremony, witnessed by only a few of the most intimate friends of the contracting parties, was performed by Rev. Dr. Hooper. The bride was handsomely attired in mauve silk, and carried a bouquet of white roses. Miss Emma Scott, Napane, sister of the bride, was the bride's attendant, and wore a pretty gown of white organdie and carried pink roses. D'Arcy Hooker, Toronto, was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Sills left for their home at Napane, with the best wishes of their Toronto friends. Their many Napane friends extend congratulations.

The case of Waller vs. Pruyn was heard Monday and judgment was handed out yesterday forenoon. Mrs. Pruyn was given $500 damages and was laid over until the fall session. Arnold Wolfe arrived home on Monday from Winnipeg, where he has been for the past couple of months.

Early on Sunday morning the fire bell aroused the light sleepers, who quickly got out and headed their way towards the G. T. R. tracks, north of the town, where the store shed of the Hay of Quinte railway was discovered to be on fire. As no waterworks extend that far, the fire brigade could do nothing, and the building, with contents, was burned to the ground. About thirty iron gates and a quantity of other necessities was stored in the shed and all were injured beyond use. It is supposed that the fire was caused by a tramp, who took lodging in the premises for the night. James Blute left on Tuesday for a two-months stay in Manitoba and the territories; his destination is Strathcona, Alberta.

Miss Daisy Bruton, Toronto, is visiting her grandmother, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bruton, Miss Georgia Daly left this week for Boston, where she takes charge of a large hospital, while her cousin, matron of the hospital takes a three months' holiday. She will likely remain in the United States and follow her profession. George Green, of Owen Sound, has taken a position with Garrett & Son.

Alex. T. Pruyn is visiting his mother, Mrs. T. D. Pruyn. She leaves today for Warton, where he has a good position with the Booth fish company. Maud Bruton is recovering rapidly from illness. The bulletin announcing the postponement of the coronation was read with much sadness by our citizens, and expressions of genuine regret at the serious illness of our king was fully expressed by the people.

Fred. Smith has returned from a month's trip through the prairie country of the west. He went as far as Calgary, and was charmed with the wonderful country that he beheld for the first time. He says everything is prosperous and booming in that comparatively new country and that thousands are flocking thither to settle, and in a year or two a very great advancement will be noted.

SPRIT OF THE PRESS. So It Would Appear. Hamilton Times. "Toronto to the Good" wears a very thin veneer.

That's The Question. Ottawa Journal. Some of the colonial premiers are accused of talking in London, but what in the world did they go there for?

And Out Of Sight. Toronto Star. The cost of the coal strike up-to-date is $35,000,000. The consumer can see the price going up ten cents a ton a week.

That's The Point. Toronto Mail. No wonder the Canadian coronation contingent objects to doing police duty in London. It could have secured service of that kind without going so far from home.

Not "Made In Germany." Toronto Telegram. Will lord Kitchener please turn his harbed wire fences into something for Harburo to run up against when she goes looking for trade in South Africa?

Lady Pauncefoot's Departure. Washington, D.C., June 25.—Lady Pauncefoot and the Misses Pauncefoot left Washington, to-day, en route to England to make the necessary preparations for the reception of lord Palm's remains at the late ambassador's ancestral home at Preston. The body will be carried to England on the cruiser Brooklyn, now being made ready for sea at the New York navy yard.

REMAINED UNCROWNED. For Long Time in Memory of His Revered Mother. A recent issue of London Modern Society contained these interesting remarks: "A very long wait between a sovereign's accession and coronation tends to make staidly people nervous at the possibility that something may happen to prevent the latter event taking place. However, in king Edward's case, a considerable delay seemed unavoidable for two reasons; the first being, that his majesty's predecessor was his own revered mother, for whom a longer mourning would be necessary than for an uncle, grandparent, brother, or sister; and the second, that many months of investigation and preparation would be required for all to be properly in readiness for a coronation which had not been seen in England for sixty-four years." Twelve months elapsed between the accession and coronation of queen Victoria, who succeeded an uncle with whom she had never associated intimately. Our present king remains unassociated and uncrowned five months longer than the late sovereign did—this extra wait giving the better chance of fine weather for outdoor pageantry and festivities than if winter or early spring had been chosen. "The monarchy has certainly gained by king Edward's willingness to be frequently seen by his subjects, and in his starting with them, so to say, so many of his splendid possessions. His majesty and his graceful, kind-hearted queen deserve to be highly valued the more so because the uncompromising fact cannot always be forgotten that they have come to the throne late in life, and can hardly expect a very lengthy reign. Let Britons, therefore, make much of Edward VII and Alexandra."
