QUALITON NOT POSSIBLE. Bystander, in the Weekly Sun, dissects upon the coalition question, and cites instances during the reign of Peel, North, Aberdeen and Disraeli to show that forced political relations are never happy nor harmonious.

Mr. Smith, however, overlooks one coalition that has worked very well, and without any evidence of friction. The conservatives and liberal unionists of England have been united since home rule became a government issue under Gladstone. They were far apart generally, but they felt so intensely upon this question that they were drawn closer and closer together, and the coalition now appears to be a permanent one.

There is also the coalition government of New Brunswick, one which has undergone several changes and yet endures, though repeated attempts have been made by the conservative party to wreck it. These instances, however, afford no comfort in the reflection that there may be a coalition in Ontario. Such a thing is impossible in the face of the opinion which the parties in Ontario have been expressing of each other. The leaders are at dangerous points, at cross purposes, at variance with each other, and there is no way of compromise or conciliation, except by a stultification that is out of the question. If there cannot be a gain in power by the liberals, as expected, there will have to be a new election, but of that there is not now any prospect.

HONESTY REALLY PAYS.

One of the first and important lessons of life, which the boy is taught, is that honesty pays. Honesty in everything, in the manner of one's life, in his speech, his actions, his dealings with others. The application is found in the effort of some people not to steal, even when it can be done without the risk of detection. Only that and nothing more.

A boy in Montreal, just sixteen, and old enough to know the value of money, found a marked bank cheque for $19,275. It may have been of no use to him, because the loser may have gone to the trouble of notifying the bank of his loss and stopping payment. That was not known, however. The boy took the cheque home and showed it to his father, and was advised to look up the loser and restore to them their property. He did this, and was made a present of $5. To the boy the gift was generous enough, but it was scarcely adequate to the demands of the occasion, and did not put a high enough premium upon the young man's honesty. It showed appreciation, but not enough appreciation of the principle which one extols when he says "Honesty is the best policy," and actions sometimes speak louder than words.

The boy in the home, which is the best school, receives the impress of character which will never leave him. The father or mother, or both, who teach, by example, the merit of honesty in all things is bestowing something which is better than money. What a lot of sham there is in the world! What a lot of deception, and to no purpose! To feign one thing and practice another tells a condition of heart and mind that is very offensive. The only safe individual is the one who is the same always and whose life is a reflection of his thought and speech, whose behaviour is the constant exemplification of his teaching. If the boys of the day, and the girls, too, are to grow up into model men and women they must be taught the virtue of principle by their superiors in the home, the office, the shop, the factory, and the marvel of it is that, amid the shams and cheats of the day, there is so much honesty.

CRIME AND ITS REWARDS.

Two lessons are conveyed, solemnly, by the late which came to Fred Rice, and as a result of his abandonment to crime. Rice was arrested in comfort. He was patted, pampered, and spoiled. When he was young he had too many advantages. He had a good home and indulgent parents. He had education, such an education as should have opened his eyes to the opportunities and potentialities of his life. He had occupation, and began his career with a salary and a position which should have given him gratification.

Yet he went wrong by living too much with boon-companions whose fast careers demanded more money than they could honestly acquire. Hence the adoption of that profession in which Rice had a long and exciting run before he completed the exciting which caused his arrest in Toronto and the murder for which he was hanged.

Fast life is always costly. The young man who engages in it finds himself in the toils sooner or later. The crackman may have his periods during which he acts generously, even chivalrously, towards his fellows and sympathetically towards the unfortunate. Rice, in Chicago, played the gallant to the girls in good society, and cast his money freely into the laps of street beggars, while at heart he was a desperado and showed it by his later acts. Again crime hardens and degrades. In Canada it is punished as it deserves. Money will not retard the wheels of justice. Everything was tried that talent and money could suggest to save Rice from the gallows, and in vain. He had his trial, a fair one, and he was convicted. In the United States by the strategies of the lawyers cases are carried along for years. In Canada justice is swift, in imposing the penalty of a capital offence, and Rice's case is an illustration of this fact.

At least 20,000 men will be wanted to assist in the harvest of Manitoba this year. Good news.

The house of lords is now after the war office, and making its heads unsteady. It wants what it will not get—a cleaning out.

How much money did the Michigan lumbermen put into the local election, and in favour of the opposition? That is the question of the day.

The kick of the Toronto Council against the school board has cost a pretty penny, which the people are paying in current taxation. There are some very obtuse folks in the Toronto city council.

The Mail complains that things are being said about the conservative politicians that are not true. Of course the conservative politicians are a pure-minded lot and above the trafficking in fibs!

In Toronto complaint is made that the pupils enter the technical school, from the public schools, deficient in mathematics, spelling and composition. There is something wrong somewhere. What is it?

The gift of £1,000 to Mrs. Steyn, on the eve of her departure for Europe, whether she goes with her invalid husband, is a touching incident. The man, wrecked by the war, physically and financially, becomes a burden to a devoted wife, and she becomes the object of the people's pity. The picture is a sad one.

SAYINGS AND COMMENTS.

By Captain J. D. Chartrand of Kingston.

Lord Kitchener has done his task and is back home.

Twenty-five years that man has been working, plod, plod, silent, stern, from the tedious surveying of Cyprus, in passing through the drudging burden of the Sudan to end with the grinding down of the Boers.

Criticized, he has been all over the world, likewise by his own people, and especially by his own well-officers. He was a bully, a failure, a know-nothing, a vulgar martinet, with no heart, no soul.

Plod, plod away, silent and sphinx like, Kitchener went on drearily, days after days, months after months, years after years. He says to the one-eyed blue eyes, the line of communication wants you are wanted at home. He cuts short the humane nuances of female bachelors, he checks the varieties of newspaper correspondents, he scorns at meddling recommendations.

He gathers and packs the women and children of an enemy, gives them food, shelter, clothes, doctors and teachers. He proclaims martial law for Cape Colony; he runs down the mischief makers. He slowly builds thousands of miles of block-houses and wire fences to stop the wanderings of the foe.

Some of his men, some generals, some great ones, have been hounded to pieces, no signs of distress, the same unconcerned daily go-go, as usual. Always plod, plod away, relentless, impassive, the same icy-cold glance of his steel blue eyes, and the same quiet game of billiards at night, his only pleasure in life.

When comes the end, he is at the top as a diplomat. He shows a warm and generous heart. He praises the enemy about his courage and his bravery. And he gives Tommy Atkins the benefit of the whole work.

Kitchener is the kind of man to quadruple the beating of the British patriotic heart.

The more I go back into English history, the less I see the equal of Kitchener. Gordon and Wellington alone have a chance of comparison.

But Gordon died without finishing his task and Wellington was one of the brave fighting bucks of the epoch. He only had the enemy to handle, and his enemy was a played out hero, undermined by sickness, discouragement and his surroundings.

And Kitchener, alone, had to fight at first whims of his own people, society cliques, and then the enemy. His battle-fields were as large as France, Germany and Austria-Hungary put together, and he wasted no effort, without any rest, where the enemy would not at ease.

He sternly overcomes all that and then he gives the home Tommy Atkins and the colonial Tommy Atkins their dues.

And that man is sent to India. What a pity! They want him at home. He is the only British officer able to reform the army. Lord Roberts is too old and too king for that.

Poor Tommy Atkins has at last been remembered. One great English general has had the courage to publicly tell that Tommy Atkins is the real camp builder. The officer has his share, but what can he do without Tommy Atkins?

An old French general, marshal Soult, also said that the private soldier was the tool of the general's conduct, before embarking at Halifax. What a flagrant injustice!

Soldiers are officially praised, but privately despised. They stop the sympathy. No respectable working man would admit red coat under his roof. Then the bar-room and the streets are the only places opened to Tommy. He is a dare-devil, an I-don't-care-a-snap-for-anything. He gets drunk and he is discharged as unfit. What a shame!

Let the poor beggar, who goes to death for us, get his beer at times.

Bricklayer's Backache.

It requires a good strong sturdy man to stand the strain of the hard work that falls to the lot of a mason.

Exposure to the hot sun and the cutting winds, bending over, inhaling the fine dust of the lime, brick or stone, all these things are bound sooner or later to tell on the kidneys and put them out of working order.

The poor old back begins to ache and pain, the urine is scant and scalds when passing.

Any mason who finds his back aching and his kidneys bothering him can have these troubles removed and be put in fit shape for his work by a bottle or two of Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets.

ACTED LIKE A CHARM. Mr. Geo. Green, South Street, Aylmer, Ont., a stone and brickmason, well known in that town and vicinity, says: "For some fifteen years I have had trouble with my back and kidneys. It arose from my attempting to lift a very heavy stone and strain myself. I have tried all sorts of remedies in the hope of being cured, but obtained very little relief. My back would be so bad at times that it was with great pain and difficulty I could straighten up when I arose from my bed in the morning, and I suffered so much that I had to give up my mason work altogether. I read a good deal about Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets and bought a supply from my druggist. They acted like a charm—back the soreness and stiffness out of my back so that I can now straighten up with ease. The pain is all gone and I feel strong and well. Price 25c a box, at all druggists or by mail, The Dr. Zia's Process Co., Toronto."

WOMAN'S POWER

Perfection of Form, Feature, and Mind Render Women All-Powerful. Health, However, the Greatest Charm.

Woman's greatest gift is the power to inspire admiration, respect, and love. There is a beauty in health which is more attractive to men than mere regularity of features.

The snap and spirit which health gives to the eye, the movement, and the speech are full of magnetism. Sickly women can't understand this. They only know that they are miserable, and their efforts to be attractive are languid and weak.

Woman's influence in the world is limited by her strength, and the strength of health is real strength. It brings with it beauty and grace and loveliness of disposition.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, should be a woman's constant study. If she would be all she may, she must guard well against the signs of ill health.

Regular and painless menstruation is absolutely necessary. The help which Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gives to women who are attacked by any disorder of the feminine organism is real, permanent help. It cures all weaknesses of the organs and makes it possible for women to retain their health and beauty to maturity.

Mrs. Pinkham advises women who are ill free of cost. Address her at Lynn, Mass. Thousands owe their health to her.

A Boston Woman's Experience.

"Dear Mrs. FURBER:—I feel very grateful to you for the benefit I derived from your kind advice and remedies. I was troubled with a complication of female troubles, had ovaritis, painful and irregular menstruation, leucorrhoea, nervousness and weakness. I had no appetite and could not sleep nights. The least exertion would cause shortness of breath and dull pains in my hips and side. The doctors all advised me to have an operation and have one of my ovaries removed, but this I could not bear to think of. I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking the first bottle I was much improved. It renewed my appetite, health and strength. I continued taking it, also your Blood Purifier and Sensitive Weak until entirely cured of all my troubles. The pains have never returned and my health is splendid. Your remedies have been a boon to me and I am sure many a woman owes her life to them."—MRS. WEBB, 356 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. (March 15, 1901.)

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles or such hosts of grateful friends. Remember this when you go to buy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

$5000 REWARD.—We have deposited with the National City Bank of Lynn, $5000, for the person who can identify the above testimonial letter as not genuine, or was published before obtaining the writer's special permission. Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Don't be hard on him. He protects our home, our families, our trade, our motherland. He gives his blood for us. And we punish and disgrace him for the least little failings. Who, among us, is ready to throw the first stone at him? Kitchener understands Tommy and being an old soldier myself, I hold that general in deep veneration. As for the soldier, who goes to death for us with a light heart, I admire and love him, whatever may be his failings or his faults.
