EXPLORATION OF ALASKA. Surveying Party Crosses Beluga

Washington, July 21.-Word just been received from Alfred Brooks, geologist in charge of the work of exploration which the United States geological survey is conducting in Alaska, that his party has successfully crossed the Beluga river. This party recently landed in Southern Alaska, and expects to penetrate the region in the vicinity of Mount Me-Kinley, as far as the Tanana river, whence they will proceed to Circle City and the Forty Mile district, if the season is not too far advanced, or will ascend the Yukon river, of which the Tanana is the principal tributary on the south, if it is too late to go fur-

Much of the region through which they will pass is entirely unknown, and the Begula river is supposed to be the greatest obstacle to progress, Mr. Brooks reports that with the aid of a boat he safely swam his entire outfit over this stream. He also reports that their first view of Mount McKinley was had from Mount Sushitna, a distance of 125 miles. Mount McKinley is the highest mountain on the North American continent-70,464 feet above the sea level-and lies in the midst of an extremely rugged ragion which has never been explored.
