EXAMPLE TO THE LIVING.

A bright light went out with the sudden and untimely death of Dr. Horsey, of Owen Sound. He will be remembered by many in Kingston, in which he has relatives, and in which he made many friends during his college course.

Early in life he was marked out for public service. He had a taste for politics, for the discussions of public questions, for the concerns of affairs of state. He became a leader among the students, and in one election, which took place while he was at college, he made the welkin ring with his impassioned and eloquent language.

Though a man of tact, of fluent speech, of cheerful temperament and magnetic manners, he did the wise thing of giving to his profession his first consideration, and in the special mission in which he engaged, in China and Japan, amassed a competence. Then he felt free to give some of his time to the service of the people, and entered parliament under most promising circumstances. As member for North Grey, and as a public-spirited citizen, as a medical man who served for the love of it, he was very much in evidence, and all too soon, when but thirty-five years of age, had his career closed.

He will be an example to the young men in his devotion to duty, his energy, his thrift, his usefulness. He has not lived in vain.

THE FUTURE OF WOMEN.

A bible reader in Erie, Pa., has reached the conviction, after much study, that women have no occasion to be good, that they do not go to heaven. He says the bible reveals all that we know of God and His place of abode, and he finds no mention in the book of any woman having been translated to the place of eternal rest.

What becomes of the women, then, at death? Our friend sees the necessity of locating them somewhere, and so he alleges that they may be annihilated; they may reach heaven, but will not be recognized as women; they may after death undergo a change and become males.

The women may be disturbed over this discovery, but it is not likely. They are intelligent beings, and as capable of reasoning as the Erie philosophers. They realize that there are some things that are matters of mere speculation, and one of them is the experience after death. No one who passed beyond the veil has returned to tell of what he has seen and felt and known. The intermediate state may be like that which a Montreal man described on Sunday, with its different divisions, separated by a great gulf, and yet within seeing and hearing distance, and the souls of those who have entered them may be pursued in passing and helped by prayers. In this intermediate state men and women may lose their identity and emerge free of all the distinctions that mark them in this life.

The church has its conception of life here and hereafter, but it does not indulge in wild speculation. Neither should its members. The one dominating thought is that there is continuity of life, and that one begins on earth a preparation for life in heaven. Beyond that it is not safe to go.

The women who are assigned to annihilation, to extinction, or worse, through the predictions of a hapless individual who has undertaken the solution of a hitherto insoluble problem, may lose their sleep in consequence, but if they do they will be showing a lack of the common sense that has marked them in the past.

FRICITION IN FRANCE.

The disturbances which have occurred in France, with regard to education, will have one good effect. They will clear off a lot of misunderstanding which has existed in respect of the import, intent, or meaning of the associations' law.

Why should the government, at any time, undertake to close the religious schools? It is not stated positively that they are a menace to the state, but it is insinuated, vaguely, that the religious leaders are more loyal to the church and its authority than they are to the power which is represented by the national government.

The legislators—and they are not, as a rule, men of deep religious instinct or emotion—have entertained the idea that the young, in their education, are given thoughts and impressions that are inimical to republicanism; and they have aimed, indirectly, in curbing this propensity by suppressing the institutions of certain orders. The primary schools may have been included in the sweeping measure of the assembly, but the former premier, the popular Waldeck-Rousseau, did not think so, and made no attempt to enforce the law.

The situation is made intolerable by the fact that the government has now closed the schools in which thousands of little children have been taught, without anticipating the effect and without providing substitutes. For the time being the masses are being antagonized, for the French are generally lovers of education, and anxious that their young shall begin their mental training early. The government insists upon the suspension of education, and if it have not the state schools it must permit the continuation of the schools which are voluntary and religious.

To undertake something radical, drastic, revolutionary, and enforce it with the aid of police and military, only to abandon it as impracticable, merits the ridicule rather than respect of the people.

SATURDAY THOUGHTS.

John Charlton does not think the referendum will carry. There are a good many others who think the same thing, though they are not notable or eccentric enough to get their names into print.

Sir Charles Dilke is not a pessimist. He does not fear the investment of American capital in British industries. He reasons that people will not hurt whatever they have put their money in.

The Quebec Chronicle, conservative, urges the local government to adopt Ontario's policy with regard to pulp wood. Mr. Whitney had better see that his party does not throw him down at this particular juncture.

France must have some excitement on hand. The school closings supply the needed stimulation for the time being, and it will be followed by that of the school openings presently. The nuns have their friends and they will win in the end.

The Bell telephone company is putting its wires in Brandon under ground. It's a pity it cannot be ordered to do that same thing in every town and city. The poles and wires of telegraph, telephone and electric light companies are a decided disfigurement and drawback.

Goldwin Smith objects to the king's dinner to the poor of London because it opened the eyes of the visitors to the seamy side of life. As well object to all philanthropy and benevolence because it may lead to discovery. No great city can obscure its poor, and it need not be ashamed of them.

Lieut. Col. Sam Hughes has, by the age limit, been obliged to give up the command of the 45th regiment, Lindsay, with which he has been connected since a boy. Col. Sam prides himself that he has done a good deal to improve the corps, and still had some considerable time in which to improve the affairs of the militia department and empire generally.

It is being shown that the $60,000, paid by estate of late Hon. Frank Smith as government tax, was by no means the highest in the short record of the succession duties act of Ontario. The executors of the late Allan Gilmore, of Ottawa, paid $131,693 in 1905. But these heirs were not any happier than the other fellows, notwithstanding their rare distinction, though ample was left for the most luxurious desires.

PURCHASED A FARM.

Sale of a Stock-The Cheese Board Session. Napanea, July 26.—At the cheese board, yesterday afternoon, 1,325 boxes of cheese were boarded, 880 white and 445 red. Of these 230, white, sold at 10-1-16c; 440, at 10c; bidding for balance ranged from 9c to 9 1/2c; no sales. Buyers present, Alexander, Thompson, Cleary, Van Laven, Bissell, McKinnon and Brenton.

Florence Bissonette, Stirling, is visiting Miss Maggie Edwards. Mrs. (Dr.) Ming and little son, Lou, left to-day for a week's visit with friends in Rochester. Dot Smith, of the Robinson company, is visiting friends in Syracuse this week. A month's visit with S. C. Warner, Denver, Col. Mabel McLean left this week to visit friends in Lancaster, for a few weeks before proceeding to Ranft, Miss Rooms will close her dress-making rooms for the month of August.

James Kenny, this week, purchased the "Bartels" farm on the York Road, near Morven, 170 acres, one of the finest farms in the county. Price paid $1,000. F. P. Douglas bought his grey mare about four miles from Napanea, near Selby, where she had wandered to when she found herself free.

J. W. Relyea, Prescott, has purchased from Donna Daly the Lakey & Co's stock. Stock taking is now in progress. Mr. Relyea makes a business of purchasing bankrupt stocks. R. J. Wales intends to fit up his new building in course of erection, for an up-to-date opera house. He will make a seating capacity of 700 people.

NEWSPAPER POINTS.

An Ardent Wish. This is great growing weather, and we should like to see government majorities get the benefit of it.

A Cool Proposition. The proposition to put United States ice on the British market will undoubtedly be received very coldly by the people.

A Sensible Occupation. Farmers hereabouts are talking of abandoning attempts at wheat growing and going into the raising of ducks.

And Wouldn't Write. Sir Redvers Buller would have lived and died with a great reputation with the crowd as a soldier had he been born dumb.

A Timely Warning. The new premier of England, being a fine golf player, it is hoped that he will neither slice, pull or fumble in his new position.

Seen In The Clouds. The Rev. Mr. Steen says there is a place between earth and heaven. We wonder that he is a balloonist and knows where he is.

Their Fishing Lies. Some New Jersey clergymen should be told that to tempt young women members of their church to raise funds by kissing men stunks of immorality.

IS ATTRACTING MEMBERS.

NOVEL ASSOCIATION FORMED IN NEBRASKA. Society to Promote Matrimony, Insure Happy Homes, and a Reasonable Start in Life for Young Couples.

David City, Neb., July 25.—Two attorneys of this city have formed a novel benevolent association, that is attracting hundreds of members. It is a variation upon the old marriage benefit association idea, and presents so attractive a proposition that arrangements have been made to incorporate it.

It is entitled an "Association to Promote Matrimony, Insure Happy Homes, and a Reasonable Start in Life for Young Couples." The plan is as follows: Members pay into the order $1.50 a month for two years. If married at the end of that time they are entitled to draw $200 from the treasury.

By paying that sum for four years $400 is guaranteed. By keeping up the payments for six, eight or ten years, the payer is entitled to draw $600, $800 or $1,000.

Members pay into the order $1.50 a month for two years. If married at the end of that time they are entitled to draw $200 from the treasury.

The association embraces men and women from all walks of life, clerks, business and professional men, clerks, farmers and bankers. The membership is not entirely confined to the young, but at least twenty-five members are of middle age.

All the engaged couples in this city are applicants for membership, and if the young people have their doubts about it they will put it out of their minds at the end of the first two years. The plan bears some resemblance to the diamond tonnage plan, whereby a man pays in $100 in two years and gets a diamond worth $165 or $150 in cash. The first contractors were paid in full, but there were so few lapses, that most of the concerns went broke.

CROPS ARE GOOD.

In Manitoba—Lands Rising in Value There. Napinka, July 21.—(To the Editor): Our business committee is on the verge of complete dissolution. It was organized about three months ago by the retailers of the town, when, by some chance a leading citizen, who has no business in the town, was elected to office. Just last week the others woke to the fact, and tried to oust him. He has some of the bull-dog kind of tenacity and refused. Quite a row was started, and the result is if the officer stays the rest will dissolve.

Lady Minto has assisted in the erection of a hospital at this place. The work will go on shortly. A site for the building cannot be decided upon. Napinka is to have, after all, a roller mill this fall of 100 pounds capacity. As bonuses are out of order in Manitoba, a subscription of $3,000 has been raised among the people of the locality.

Our baseball team was not able to go to Hartney as the best players could not get a large crowd, and it was Hartney fair, and a purse of $50, given to the team winning out. Hartney-Melita team went down. The Hartney-boys defeated the Melita team with a score of eighteen to thirteen. The fair attracted a large crowd, and was good in all its departments, especially the racing.

Nearly all the residents of this town are going to Winnipeg fair to-day. Great attractions have been secured, including a large crowd, and the high diver from a bicycle.

Last night a large crowd of Ontario people passed through here home-seeing. Many were from Prince Edward and Hastings counties. They were en route for their territories. Last has all taken a rise of one dollar per acre in Manitoba. Within the past two weeks there has been four sections sold here—all prairie land.

All the wheat has headed out here, and if nothing happens to it, it will yield from twenty-five to thirty bushels per acre. There are much better promises this year than last. New threshers are being shipped in ready to receive the crop of last fall, and likely all the wheat will be threshed before the heavy rains set in.—G.

CZAR HOPES FOR HEIR.

All the World is Naturally Concerned. St. Petersburg, July 25.—The czar and crannies are at present living quietly at their favorite country palace, Tsarko Selo, in anticipation of a happy event. Russia is in eager anticipation also, for the expected event has a deep political significance that cannot be lost to direct-bearing on the empire's future policy. Should the looked for heir be a son, he will, should he live, in course of time become emperor of Russia, and will be regarded under the political influence of the present czar, thus practically insuring a continuation of the enlightened, progressive policy of Nicholas II.

The czar has four children, all of them daughters. While the government of Russia is an absolute hereditary monarchy, and while the will of the emperor is law, yet he cannot transfer his throne to his daughter. If Nicholas II. should die before a son is born to him, his successor would be his brother, the grand duke Michael, born in 1878. The latter is entirely under the influence of his mother, the dowager empress Marie Dagmar, widow of emperor Alexander III, now in her fifty-fifth year. These few facts possess important political significance, which may change the future history of Europe to a marked degree, and are of great interest in Russian policy, may vitally affect every great European power, all the world is naturally concerned.

SAYINGS AND COMMENTS.

By Captain J. D. Chartrand, of Kingston.

"Here, you are at last I have been looking for you for ever so long. Where have you been? Or, rather, where was I? The same old story. I have in my hand a lot of stuff, I want you to print, and let's go to your quarters, so I can freely speak with you."

It was my poor friend, the cynic, who met me at the corner, caught my coat button, with his thumb and forefinger and bringing his blasted face to within two inches of my ears, he whispered to me the eager demand for a small loan.

He was pretty shabby, his linen and boots dog-dog, his looks dejected, but his yellowed white straw hat wore a large new funeral crop. We jumped into a tramway and rode silently to my lodgings. In coming in, my friend sank down into one of my arm chairs and said, with sobs in his voice: "Yes, my dear fellow, a duffer took the poor thing in a canoe, last Sunday and drowned her. She was seventeen, as bright a lass as ever lived. Good, beautiful, my brother's only child, my only love on earth. And that idiot took her out in a canoe, struck a buoy and upset the craft. He could not swim, but he hung on to the canoe and the girl went down. My poor mother told me to wear that, cease, although it's against my principles. I didn't like to put a public sign on my sorrow. I think public mourning is a lark. How many people exhibit mourning that are very glad of it. It's all show off. And you know I obeyed the old lady, but if I die before her, I'll pray her in to show her pain in the streets. People don't care, if you are sad or not. If you want to cry, do it between four walls. It's amazing the carelessness and imprudence of our people. These ostentatious are epidemic. Of course, I see that for myself, for men don't take the trouble to think over such things. These epidemics are not yet catalogued in medical archives, have no civil state, are not as yet materialized with their microbes. But they are nasty, and mortal and terrible, and the law don't protect the citizens against them, as it does against scarletina, small-pox, and the rest. The cause is one of the foremost. How guilty is the father, who allows his child to go in a canoe with a boy who can't paddle or swim. My poor little niece was the victim of that, day before yesterday. But enough of the cause. What about the revolvers, shot-guns, hunting, and fishing parties, ice-crossing, skating, and God knows what else? Far in advance, take the deer hunting. At each season, dozens of men are shot. And fishing parties? Well, whiskey does all that. That famous whiskey, so sweet and velvety to the palate. He steadies the nerves, but he obscures the eyes. And the fallow flocks of the stalking hunter is often taken for the deer and down over the man. And fishing parties. We take them for an outing, indulge in too many refreshments, get bold and careless, lose presence of mind, and upset the boat."

Cures Of St. Anne.

Kankakee, Ill., July 25.—To-day was St. Anne's day and thousands of Roman Catholics from many points within a radius of 200 miles celebrated the occasion by joining in the eleventh annual pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Anne, near this city. The shrine, which has become famous to the country over, is located in the French Catholic church in the village of St. Anne, about twelve miles from here. The shrine contains a relic in a bone supposed to have been taken from the hand of St. Anne. Many stories are told of marvellous miracles performed through the intercession of the saint at the shrine, and each year St. Anne's day, the devout French Catholics journey to the shrine to worship at the relic of their patron saint, and bring their diseased and crippled, so that they may receive the benefits ascribed to be bestowed by the devotees.

Trooper Gresson, of the 2nd C.M.H. who belongs to Brandon, Man., died on an intercolonial train, on Friday afternoon on the way to Montreal from Halifax. Heart disease is the supposed cause of death. Lord Donaldson, the new general officer commanding the Canadian militia, received a hearty welcome at Ottawa on Friday afternoon. The troops were granted Mrs. J. G. W. Mackay special permission to hold private services over the body of her husband at her home.
