The Prettiest Spectacle Seen Many a Day-Audience Was Delighted - Charming Young Ladies and Gallant Young Men Fill the Stage.

The Carnival of Musical Romances. presented at the Grand Opera house ast evening for the benefit of th Home for Friendless Women and Chil dren, well deserved the unusually large attendance with which it was greeted. Charmingly gowned ladies invaded even the bome of the way up near the zenith of heaven, where the heat of a midsummer night reached the climax of intensity. Every seat in the balcony was sold early while the parquette chairs were in great demand. Seldom has theatre held a larger, happier or more lashionable audience.

Why were they there? Not because this was the first and only attraction of the summer season. Not altogether that it was presented by a New York Carnival company of considerable pute. They were there because Kingstonians are ever ready to help out good cause, and to pay kindly bute to home talent. Surely such attributes in a people are worthy of all praise and commendation
