A TOUR OF INSPECTION.

The British newspaper men, who are now in Canada on the invitation of the government, to see the country, to study its resources and write candidly about them, must not be rushed too quickly over the land.

The trip can be made quickly, like that of the Prince of Wales, but there is no occasion for it. The idea is not to make a forced passage across the country, within a given time, for the opportunities to see and know things will in that case be limited.

These men are out for a holiday, and it can only be made such by frequent halts and visits to the principal cities and places. There are historic spots in the provinces, industrial centres, commercial avenues, which should be visited; and there are the grain fields, the mountain passes, the mines, the forests, which have to be seen in order to be appreciated.

This is a tour of inspection, and it takes place opportunistically, at a period when Canada is being investigated by capitalists, when the tide of immigration is the greatest, when everything points to an amazing development in population, in industrial wealth, in national power.

If the British journalists write as they feel Canada will be pictured as a land of milk and honey, and the British people will, Caleb and Joshua like, be advised to take possession of it.

DEATH BY ELECTRICITY.

The theory has been advanced, by an electrician, that the criminals who are electrocuted, who die in the electric chair at Sing Sing, may not be killed, but may survive the shock.

This man, the vice-president of the Electric Light company at White Plains, N.Y., has it that his employees are frequently shocked by higher voltage currents than are administered in the Sing Sing prison, and live. Therefore it is possible that the subjects of the shock may rally only to find themselves helplessly immured, or buried.

Dr. Gibbons, of Syracuse, adds his testimony upon the subject. He saw a murderer electrocuted in November, 1893, and two hours later adopted artificial respiration and was surprised to find that the man actually breathed.

At this point he was stopped and the experiment was incomplete. The doctor, however, is persuaded that death by electricity resembles death by drowning and that "an apparently dead body can be restored to life by the same methods used in resuscitating persons suffering from submersion."

What is possible in this respect may never be known. There is no disposition on the part of the commonwealth to revive the criminals when death has been ordered. Indeed the evidence of their departure of this life is usually complete when the doctors have finished their autopsy. The surgeon's knife is a wonderful thing, and it does its work with great effect.

IS A CURE POSSIBLE.

Dr. Andrews, the chancellor of the Nebraska University, sees the necessity of doing something to restrain or check the social evil.

He says that to poverty and misfortune, the lapse from grace, are due the abandonment to evil of so many women. The cure for it, effectually will come when the economic condition of the people has improved, when they can honestly earn enough to eat "and when the human mind has been improved. Then, and only then, will vice gradually die, and of its own accord. Meanwhile what is to be done? Dr. Andrews' plan is to isolate the bad women, to give them comfortable homes and occupations, but to keep them from pure-minded people. "Let them," he remarks, "have all the liberty, and good things that people usually have, but keep them away from everybody except their own kind." Is that all? The idea of narrowing women of evil repute has been tried in the west, in the mining towns. They are obliged to live in certain limits and pretty much of themselves, but there is no attempt at this reformation. Is that impossible?

A woman taken up on the issue in the Chicago Inter Ocean, and she plainly states that a man cannot evolve the solution for the social evil. Only women have understood women, and women are doing a great deal to lessen evil. But are women only vicious? Are the men untainted? And if not, why should they not be segregated or married?

"Give to women," says the champion of her sex, "the freedom given to men. They are struggling gradually from the thralldom of narrow slavery which has been their portion and have for hundreds of years, and when women of to-day fully realize they are not the cringing, narrow-minded slaves of the past, they will be better, stronger, morally and physically. True man cannot evolve. Dependence has slowly finding the solution which has been the ruin and downfall of women of the past, and I believe that independence will eventually save her in the future."

CANADA IS BILLED FOR NATURAL LOOTING.

Newcastle Merchants Want £18 for Damage Inflicted by C. M. R. Men - May Make Some Changes in Buoying.

Ottawa, Aug. 21.-The Canadian Mounted Rifles who formed the last contingent were certainly a lively bunch of people. While they were in Northern Natal they had nothing much to do and consequently took to looting for amusement. They raided things in general and one day swept down on Newcastle, taking everything before them. Their reputation for unreluctance had so far spread that when they were leaving Newcastle to re-train for Durban the Newcastle merchants put up their shutters and went out of business for the afternoon.

As a result of their depredations a claim has been filed with the Canadian government for £18 for damages incurred. Besides this a certain amount of the pay was retained when they were settled with. The Australians and New Zealanders were included in the list, and a total of 200 pounds was withheld in all from the colonials in Northern Natal, when the looting took place.

Lord Dundonald will visit the camps beginning with Sussex, New Brunswick, Three Rivers next, and Niagara last. This trip will likely include a general inspection of all the forces along the route.

At present between Montreal and Kingston there are some 200 buoys, including twenty-five lighted by gas. There is talk of putting a new gas buoy near Fiddler's Elbow, and possibly one will be taken up from the north channel below Prescott and replaced by a lighthouse.

MADE IN CANADA.

Some Men Often Have Everything Imported.

Toronto Star. There are some men in Canada who have nothing Canadian about them except the money in their pockets and the food they have eaten.

They wear imported clothes, smoke imported cigars, drink imported liquors, get an imported education for their children, talk with an imported accent, import their views on public questions, go abroad for their health, when they fall ill, and altogether proceed on the theory that while in Canada, they are visitors far from home and country.

There are a great many Canadians who give Canada this kind of half-citizenship. They have a contempt for the Jew who, they say, will live in any country and be a citizen of none. They hold in contempt the Chinese, charging against them, as also against the Italians, that they make money in Canada and slip off home to spend it, or to found families on it.

Yet we have lots of half-citizens who although they make this country their home, and abide here with the money they make, affect to despise the institutions and manufactures of the country. They import what they sell; they buy what is imported. To all intents and purposes they treat the country as if it were to this day what it was in the era of the Hudson Bay posts.

The tall chimneys smoke, the vast array of skilled artisans labor, but not for these. If these men buy Canadian tweed suits, it is from some deceiver, who tells them the cloth is Scotch tweed. If they buy expensive furniture made in Canada, it must be palmed off on them as imported from somewhere else-anywhere else. They persist in refusing to see that old things have passed away, and that they are no longer asked to put up with the makeshifts of pioneer days. They have not yet learned that Canadians are a people and create for themselves nearly by all they need. They have inherited the habits of the first comers, who fought the forest and used the St. Lawrence River and the lakes a fine of communication with the base of supplies. But Canadian goods are gaining ground, and people are beginning to give a preference to home products.

The Star believes that the great majority of Canadians are about ready to make their Canadian sentiment of practical benefit to their country. The impetus it would give to every industry in the Dominion if we would all become members of a Made In Canada Club and pledge ourselves to give the preference to Canadian-made goods would be immense. No one can estimate it.

A Belleville Oyster Stew. Falarido, one of the company at Lake Ontario Park pavilion, tells a good story about Belleville. He says he went to an hotel there, and asked for a Belleville oyster stew, which was printed on the menu. It was finally placed before him. After putting on his spectacles he found two oysters in the bottom of the plate. He rapped them in the ribs and on the head, but they wouldn't move, and after further investigation he found they were dead, and had been dead a long time. So he concluded that was the reason why the dish was called a Belleville oyster stew.

Action For Damages. Mrs. Mills, owner of the pound property, formerly used by the city, will take action against the city for damages. It is claimed that when the city leased the property there was a good house on it. This was almost razed while the city had the property, and the city will be asked to make good the loss or replace the house in habitable condition.

AN UNFORTUNATE GIRL. A Victim of Drink-Sent to Hudson.

Deceiving Journal. Anna Martin, aged twenty-two, a wayward girl from Kingston, was a prisoner in the police court, charged with being drunk and disturbing the peace. She entered a plea of guilty.

Before passing sentence the recorder questioned the girl. She said she came here two weeks ago and asked a man at the depot where she could get work. He told her to go to Market street for the Whig and she went there to Mary Abram's place. Mrs. Abram took her in and bought her clothes and would not let her go until they had been paid for, so the girl stayed.

She afterward left there for May Thompson's and then entered Mrs. Dunbar's. The recorder thought that Dunbar was mainly responsible for the girl's condition and she was not beyond recall. He sentenced her to the House of Refuge for Women at Hudson.

It is reported that the French government will apply the law of associations to the St. Vincent De Paul society.
