MORE IN WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

The testimony of the Hon. Mr. Seddon, the premier of New Zealand, to the effect that the woman's suffrage act had been a success, has aroused a fresh interest in the question in Canada. Such a staid and cautious journalist friend as the Ottawa Free Press is inclined to the opinion that woman's suffrage "would tend to counteract many evil influences that are unhappily brought into prominence in our elections. And it seems inconsistent to grant women voting powers in municipal matters and withhold them in parliamentary."

That is the rub, and the one that suggests most consideration from the electors. Have the women really appreciated the franchise, and to the extent to which they enjoy it? The evidence of active election workers is that many of the women who have votes, in the more limited sphere, do not value them, that some do not vote except at the solicitation of a friend, and that some do not go to the polls. This experience tends to demonstrate that the women of Canada do not care about the franchise, and as a body, do not desire it. If they will not act in municipal elections what is there to convince the people that they will act in parliamentary elections.

According to Mr. Seddon the women of New Zealand are keenly alive to their privileges and decidedly discriminating in the exercise of their power. He was not the advocate originally of their enfranchisement. He did not introduce the measure, and did not endorse it at the outset. But he had been won over to admire it because of the exceedingly discreet use which the women there make of their votes. They are content to support the best men and measures, without presuming to obstruct their personality, and without aspiring to enter public life and occupy any of the public offices.

In New Zealand, therefore, there is a somewhat ideal condition of things, and if it could be duplicated in Canada, or if there was the promise of it, there would be strong ground for the revival of an agitation that has not been sensibly felt in recent years.

WAY TO DO BUSINESS.

Great enterprises are not promoted by champagne lunches. That was the observation of the Whig some months ago, when it learned that a man who was interested in the new industry to be established here had been in the city for several days. He had inspected the desirable sites for building, had taken soundings respecting the depth of water at certain places in the harbor, and gone away, and only one or two individuals had known about it.

Later experts had come to Kingston, had prosecuted their enquiries, had committed themselves to tests that cost a lot of money, and left without giving out any announcement as to their proceedings.

The council was only approached when the company, composed of men of large capital, were in a position to act definitely. The city is not asked for much. The property it owns and was willing to present as a site for the smelter, is to be purchased at an upset price, and its assessment is to be fixed at a certain amount for a number of years. The sale of this land alone is a municipal advantage. It represents, as it stands, an annual charge of over $700, and a loss in twenty years of over $15,000. The purchasers relieve the corporation of that charge at once, and they pay the school tax indefinitely and upon the value of the new works.

The bona fides of the company have been clearly established. Its members are among Canada's most successful business men. They have gone about this enterprise in a proper way and spirit. They have satisfied themselves that Kingston is the place for it, that here all the conditions of a new and growing industry can be had, and they are ready to proceed with their work with as little delay as possible. There is no mystery about it, but some reserve about the details pending the development of them. In due time all the facts will be known, and they will be happily received.

The history of the transaction, so far has been gratifying. The promoters of it have not been looking for glory or a bonus. They have just been giving or accepting entertainments and dazzling the public with the brilliance of their talk. The money influence of the professional exploiter has been missing. The industry simply comes here because this is the place for it, and it will be started, operated and extended according to modern ideas. It will depend upon its products for its success. It will be managed with skill and energy.

For the fact the citizen who a test for the company, has played in the preliminary negotiations, he has been son to be satisfied. He has been direct in his action, and he has had his peace. Like those whom he has represented he has demonstrated that works spoke louder than words.

THE HORSE NOT TABOOED.

The agricultural fair is about to undergo a transformation. A year ago Mr. Creelman, who represented the Ontario government, pointed out in a lengthy article, which was published, that some of the fall shows were singularly lacking in the attractions one would expect to find in them. His description of some of them gave the reader a surprise.

Mr. Creelman subsequently became the permanent superintendent of agricultural societies, his duty being to make them serviceable and their shows in accordance with the design of the act which governs them. He has incidentally issued a decree of some moment. It is in effect that the horse racing must go so far as the fall fairs are concerned. He may be able to make his command effective, for of course the government grant can be made conditional upon it. The act, however, will have to be changed. It is unreasonable to suppose that fair associations will submit kindly to what may appear to be the personal desires of an official. His view may be the view of parliament, but it must be embodied in the provisions of the Agricultural Societies' act.

What will a fall fair be without the speeding? There need not be races, of course, but there must be tests of speed, and for prizes which are worthy of the contests. True, most of the races in some exhibition centres are participated in by horses which are trained for the track and spend most of their time upon it. These horses are not entered for exhibition. But for the race money they would not be in evidence at all. They add to the life of an occasion by creating a little excitement which cannot be contributed by untrained horses. They inspire the gambling which is incidental, however, to every race track, and which the government, through Mr. Creelman, has decided to banish if possible.

The reform has only been proposed. It remains to be seen how it will materialize.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The president of the United States is being carefully guarded wherever he goes, and by military. What is he afraid of? The trusts? He is not campaigning against any other evil.

A western exchange, American, prints the ten commandments in a prominent place and heads them, "Gems of Current Thought." Great anxiety is expressed as to who the author is.

A Methodist layman in looking for a Universal Hymn book as a means of bringing the different denominations into closer relationship. The hymn book will be a step in that direction—but only a step.

The proposal is to make the Erie canal a federal work, and enlarge it so that great ships may traverse its length. The cost will be $250,000,000. The politicians see in the scheme great opportunities for plunder.

The Morgan idea of merging and co-operating is being carried into house keeping in Decatur, Mich. The people have been dining at a central place, and they claim to be saving in servants' wages and board bills.

The selection of a principal for Queen's will not be facilitated by news, paper discussion. The trustees know the requirements of the college, they know the responsibility of the task before them, and they will act accordingly.

E. A. Macdonald, ex-mayor of Toronto, is dying of paralysis. His has been a chequered career. He was an able man, a man of large natural endowments, but eccentric and excitable. He was the central figure in many a stirring scene.

Lord Raglan is bound to keep up his war spirit. The nations of the world are preparing, he says, for the great Armageddon, and Britain cannot afford to lag behind. So millions must be poured into the vortex of militarism.

Some Methodists expect a modification of the discipline by the general conference regarding amusements. It's paches to plums that they will be disappointed. Why should there be, after all, a change in that which is a matter of conscience?

The books in one of the public schools in Buffalo, and held over from the last school term, are being fumigated by the health department. Every germ of disease will be destroyed. That's right. It would not be amiss if the old books in Kingston were fumigated.

An official in the savings bank at South Bend, Ind., has protested against the publication of the Bible in chapters in the Assumption Independent, on the ground that it is "improper literature." The editor says that anything that is good enough for the Sunday school is good enough for the people. That's philosophy.

WELLINGTON WAITS.

Rescued From Drowning—A Delightful Summer.

Wellington, Aug. 28.—While Martin Pettinill was crossing the outlet at Wellington on Thursday last, and just as he was about to arise out of the water on the opposite side, his horse became frightened and sprang to one side, capsizing the buggy and precipitating Mr. Pettinill in the water. The horse became entangled in the rig and in Mr. Pettinill's endeavor to extricate it, he, too, became exhausted. His cries for help were distinctly heard across West Lake and promptly responded to by Justus Jinks and Donald Death, who had considerable difficulty in rescuing him. The animal was drowned. The boarders at Hotel Wellman are still coming and going. Mr. and Mrs. William Garratt and daughter, and Mrs. Garratt's father and mother (Pearl), Yonkers, N.Y., for some weeks the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Garratt, left per C.O.R. for their home on Friday.

Mrs. Caverly Nash, for some weeks the guest of her sister, Mrs. F. H. Burlington, took her departure for Toronto, on Monday, where she purposes visiting friends before going to her home. Miss Beatrice Nash left for Trenton to visit friends on Friday.

Rev. Mr. Vanev preached at the Methodist church on Sunday evening and Mrs. Caverly Nash, Winnipeg, sang a solo at the close of the service, which was certainly a treat. Mr. Shoury, our popular druggist, also sang a solo, the "Holy City." The Picton baseball team came to Wellington on Thursday to play the Wellington team, and were successful.

Dr. Willet Garratt arrived home from the west to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Garratt. The summer has been delightfully cool, and no complaint as to heat has arisen. The agricultural society has out some very elaborate bills for the coming fair in September. The vacant stores caused from the fire in June last, are being rebuilt.
