Address of the Fresident of St. mecent Convention.

Now let me emphasize the welcome extended at the social reunion last evening, in the name of the delegates from the United States and, ferevently to express to our brothers across the border, deep gratification at their pre-

Among the events of universal interest since our last biennial session, it is eminently proper to give first place to a reverent mention of the life and death of the queen, and their impress upon the world. With what mingled feelings of sadness and just pride do we, who, by the right of birth or the tie of blood, claim her as our own, view the unparalleled spectacle, the solemn grandeur, of a world in sorrow and mourning at her death and paying a universal tribute of homage and respect to her memory. Not so much because she was the illustrious ruler of the powerful British empire did the people of the world, for the first time in history. cease in their jealousies and contentions to mourn her death and reverently place the wreath of glory upon her tomb, but because, through her long and unsullied life, she had made conspicuous and glorious those virtues of heart and mind that grace and ennoble womanhood, and are an inspiration and a blessing to all mankind. Universally honored and respected as a noble soveriegn, whose long and illustrious reign had been marked by the deepest wisdom and prudence and to whose court life had been lent all the gentle graces and dignity of true woman, she has left behind her, however, as the most imperishable monument to her memory, At the Following Fares From that life of spotless virtue, that sweet example of faithful affection as a wife, that silent grief and loyalty as a widow, that devotion to motherhood and its duties, that charity and friendliness to the needy, that unostentation ous sympathy with sorrow, that reverent worship and trustful faith of unaffected piety. It is by this measure of worth the world has judged her and crowned her "Victoria the

At the wanton and fiendish assasination of President McKinley, the distinguished, honored and beloved Chief Executive of the United States, the civilized world stopd hushed and stunned. From every quarter came messages of deepest sympathy, of horror and of execration. Among the most touchg and appreciated were the daily nequiries of solicitude during the period of awful suspense, and the heartfelt expressions of sympathe and grief from His Majesty, Edward VII, and the eloquent and fraternal messages. from Sit Wilfrid Laurier, prime minister of Canada, "reminding us," as has been well said, "as nothing else can do, that we are members of the same house, bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh." All over the world there ascended to the throne of grace simultaneous pravers for the preservation of the life held in such regard by all. For a time it seemed assured that merciful Providence would spare it to his country and to the fulfilment of the work to which the president had consecrated his eminent qualities, but over the growing light of hope the shadows suddenly descended and deepened into the stillness of death. But "God reigneth and the government at Washington still lives;" under His guiding hand, chastened in our sorrow and strengthened in our affliction the country will work out the solution of those questions so pregnant with interest to the English speaking ples of the world, "It's God's way."

"His will, not ours, be done." There are points of close and peculiar similiarity in the qualities of these two illustrious rulers, which may afford a solution to these unparalleled manifestations of sorrow and to these Sept. 27th | tributes of respect from all men. 1e-. Oct. 11th gardless of nationality, for, added to the same qualities_of mind, the form the fearlessness in the prosecution of duties, the resoluteness of will and the grace and dignity of true man hood, we find the same purity of life, the same sweet and touching example of conjugal affection and devotion to the domestic life, the same charity of heart and sympathy with the people and the same unaffected piety and confidence in God. Truly these, then, are the qualities that the world recognize as noble and to which they pay reverence as benisons to man-
