QUEEN'S NIGHT.

THE STUDENTS AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Every Seat Was Taken - Fine Decorations - Bouquets to the Actresses - "When We Were Twenty-one" Was Much Enjoyed.

It is some years since Queen's students had a "theatre night," but this session one was arranged instead of the noisy party Thanksgiving, day and University day happened to fall upon the same date, and happily a play "When We Were Twenty-one," came to the Grand which couldn't have been better chosen for its freedom from all objectionable features.

When Queen's men undertake to do anything, it is generally accomplished with a generous and lavish hand.

Between the acts the upstairs orchestra (Crosby and Thornton), gave some good selections and the songs by the students were very much enjoyed.

The nurses of the General Hospital occupied the upper right hand boxes, and the local doctors with their wives and friends the others, noticeable among them being Drs. Garrett, Goodwin, Anglin, Thirl, Ryan, Clark, Herald, Mundell, Fowler and Knight.

The students behaved splendidly, far better than the McGill students do at their annual "theatre night" at the Montreal Academy.

The company was a splendid one, and they repeated and eloquent applause must have been very satisfactory to the players.
