

Mrs. Laura L. Barnes, Washington, D. C., Ladies Auxiliary to Burnside Post, No. 4, G. A. R., recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Indisposes that come to women only, as a rule, the doctor is called in, sometimes several doctors, but still matters go from bad to worse; but I have never known of a case of female weakness which was not helped when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used faithfully. For young women who are subject to headaches, backache, irregular or painful periods, and nervous attacks due to the severe strain on the system by some organic trouble, and for women of advanced years in the most trying time of life, it serves to correct every trouble and restore a healthy action of all organs of the body.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a household reliance in my home, and I would not be without it. In all my experience with this medicine, which covers years, I have found nothing to equal it and always recommend it."—Mrs. LAURA L. BARNES, 607 Second St., N. E., Washington, D. C.—$5.00 per bottle. Original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

WELCOME TO STUDENTS.

A Pleasant "At Home" in St. James' Schoolhouse.

Tuesday evening the young people of St. James' church tendered an "At Home" to the students of Queen's University. Despite the fact of St. James' weather prevailing, a large number attended and a most enjoyable time was spent. The schoolhouse was tastefully decorated with flags and potted plants, the work of the young men of the congregation, under the supervision of the energetic curate, Rev. T. W. Savary. Topic cards, with a dozen popular items of conversation, were rapidly filled by the guests, and much merriment was caused by the constant changing of answers. A dainty table laden with refreshments was in charge of the members of the junior Woman's Auxiliary, etc. being poured by the Misses D. C. Bett and L. Kirkpatrick.

The musical programme was greatly enjoyed by all, each number being accorded a piano solo, Miss A. J. Handy, violin solo, Miss G. A. Evans, solo, Master Grenville Peters, solo, Miss Madeline Bailey, recitation, Alexander Sharpe.

During the promenades, the Misses Munnell and Crawford supplied a delightful piano selections, Mesdames Taylor and King were the popular harpists. At 10:15 o'clock, the national anthem was sung, and a long-to-be-remembered bright evening brought to a close.

On Thursday we will publish a picture of the house on Barrie street in which the late Charles Sangster, poet and journalist, lived, and in which he wrote the poem (which we will reprint) "A Light in the Window-Pane."

BRIGHT SKETCH

OF THE DAYS WHEN KINGSTON WAS CAPITAL.

Prof. Shortt Read a Paper Before the Historical Society—James McArthur Will Contribute the Next Paper.

"Induced by the prospect of a paper by Prof. Shortt a large number turned out on Thursday night the meeting of the Historical Society. After a short address by the president, Dr. Walken, and the election of two new members, Miss Drummond and H. Tandy, the professor began his sketch of the days when Kingston was the capital. Lord Dorchester had always intended our city to be the seat of government. It was made of the Government of the Province, but since took exception to this, and was bound to have the capital in the western wilderness, about where London now stands, to suit his ideas regarding the conquest of Michigan. A compromise was effected, and muddily Little York, without any effort on its part, came in for the honor. When in 1810 the provinces were united, Toronto was quite sure of being made the seat of government, Montreal wanted it. By-town was urging its candidacy as a geographical centre and Quebec had always a strong claim. Sydenham had taken a fancy to this port, however, and on February 3rd, 1811, he announced to Kingston would be the Canadian capital. Toronto was wild, Quebec also, Montreal and By-town were more philosophic. The main part of the General Hospital, which was really intended as a home for the college then being started, was found most suitable as Government House, and there the first legislature was held. The government offices, the four stone buildings on Ontario street, now owned by the Locomotive Works. Kingston was really in a bad shape as regard accommodation for the influx of population, which naturally would be attendant in its rise in the world, as a disastrous fire had cleared out nearly half of it, late in the fall of '10. The best was made of the situation, the residence of Baron Grant, "Abwington," was leased, and was for three years the governor's residence. Sydenham died there. Sir Charles Bagot nearly died there from the disease which carried him off when he reached England, after having been governor, but a short time, and Lord Metcalfe, his successor, was very ill there. Kingston got a terrible name at this time for its exorbitant rents, and the high prices demanded for everything, and its enemies made the most of the complaints, which were in most cases quite unfounded. Between this dissatisfaction, and a secret liking on Lord Metcalfe's part for Montreal, the government was moved down there, and was a fixture till the riots of 1819, when it was taken travelling, alternating between Quebec and Toronto for some years. Some facetious person of the time suggested the advisability of putting it on a raft, and towing it about, that all might have a share in the glory.

The time of its journey here, was the end of the remarkable development of water transportation, just before the beginning of the railroads. Freight was brought from Montreal via the Rideau route, which became so congested that boats had to be locked through all night. "It was just at the time of the beginning of the continental movement, and settlers passed through here on their way to Wisconsin. Just at this time the project of deepening the waterways to admit vessels of 11 feet, was mooted, which is where we are to-day, the railroads coming in and interfering with the water traffic. So absorbed was the government in the water facilities, that she snubbed the railways, and as a reward, got sidetracked.

Kingston was then full of military life, the 43rd, 11th Regiment of the line, the Royal Artillery, and a good deal of cavalry being stationed here. Under Clitheroe—a shrewd but a weak place on Fort Hill, of which a minute account has been left. Nearly all the troops engaged were the Waterloo regiments, and their make-up included many Waterloo veterans. Society at this time was very brilliant. Balls were held monthly at Daly's hotel, at which the most distinguished men and women in Canada were present, and Lord Metcalfe writing to his sister in England, says that his income as governor, is not nearly sufficient to meet the demands of entertaining.

Mr. MacArthur in moving the vote of thanks, said the better of the evening had the power of making the characters of that time live, and move. The dean in responding to the motion, said he could not do better than draw Prof. Shortt's attention to the large turnout, lured by the prospect of an address from himself. The president also said several well deserved and complimentary things concerning the holder of Queen's chair of political economy, and the secretary adjourned to the third Tuesday in December, when Mr. MacArthur will read a paper on the derivation of names of various places in Canada.

AN OLD TIMER Re-visits the Scenes of His Early Experiences. John Anett, Gananoque, is in the city visiting friends. He is a former resident of this city, and lived here in what he terms were the "good old times." He was a resident at the time of the construction of the Grand Trunk railway, and his first ride on a railroad was over a newly-constructed piece between Kingston and Kingston Mills, to which point the rails had just been laid. He went over the territory on a locomotive and was in great fear lest the iron monster should jump the rails. He helped to build locomotives in the old Ontario foundry, when the engines had to be hauled by horses through the streets from the foundry to the Grand Trunk Junction. He was also employed for a time in the iron mill which stood on the site of the street car barns, and was an employee of the old Eagle foundry, which was located on Chatham street.

Mr. Anett is still hale and hearty and has been employed in the Gananoque Axle Works for many years.

Died At Enterprise. Eleanor J. Wagar, the beloved wife of Willis Clark, was born in Camden, on August 20th, 1813, and died at her home near Enterprise, Nov. 10th, 1902. She was married to Willis Clark on December 12th, 1830. She was a faithful and loving wife, and a kind and affectionate mother. She joined the Methodist church in her younger days. During a revival held in 1837, she took fresh courage, and in her last sickness which lasted three months, she said she was ready to go if it was the Lord's will. When young she was an active worker in the church and temperance cause, but in later years, while not taking such an active interest, she was always kind and willing to help the poor and ready to assist in any good cause. She leaves a husband, one daughter, a step son, five brothers and three sisters, besides many other relatives and friends to mourn her loss.
