THE TRIAL OVER JUDGEMENT RESERVED IN SIX CHARGES

The Charges Considered at the Last Session of the Court—The Cross-Petition Has Been Indefinitely Postponed.

By the Whig's Reporter. Napanee, Nov. 28.—What was hoped would be the last session of the Lennox election court opened this morning at nine o'clock.

Charge No. 1, alleging that Lionel Rix, of Bath, had been promised a sum of money by D. W. Ball for going after a voter named James Cunningham, was called.

Lionel Rix testified that on election day he was asked by Mr. Ball to take a box and go down to the light-house on the Brothers' Island for James Cunningham.

Asked Ball about the pay and was promised it. Later on again asked for payment and was told that when he received the money from the conservative committee it would be paid; a conservative committee had been appointed to pay such accounts.

John Thompson, a companion of the above witness, and who accompanied him on the trip for Cunningham, gave corroborative evidence.

D. W. Ball testified that Rix had asked for pay for going after Cunningham, but witness told him he could not hire him to make the trip.

Mr. Watson's argument was cut short by Justice Maclellan, who remarked, "You cannot convince me that there is anything in this charge."

Justice Osler said that such an open charge should not have been made. It might result in bringing back all the witnesses to have the charge denied.

Mr. Watson made a further charge a few minutes later, when Charles Pison was called and failed to respond, it being announced that he had gone down town.

Justice Osler said that it was a great pity such a statement should be made. The witness should be in court; it was the duty of the petitioners to see that they were in court.

A Personal Charge.

At this stage Mr. Watson asked permission to enter an additional charge, of which due notice had been given.

Mr. Cassels considered it unfair to bring forward such a charge at so late a period of the trial.

After a conference with Justice Maclellan, Justice Osler said he would allow the charge to be entered, though it should have been entered before; it was strange that the facts had not been learned at an earlier period.

Charles Wager testified that he had been approached by Mr. Carscadden on the main street, Napanee, some time in March, and asked for his vote.

Mr. Carscadden said he wanted to get me to cease voting for my life, and asked me to vote for him. I said he would see Carscadden later.

Cross examined—Told of the conversation to T. B. German. Had intended to keep it secret. Had a law suit with Willis Ferguson, in which T. B. Carscadden had given evidence against witness. Thought Carscadden should not have said anything at the trial about witness not having paid him.

Mr. Carscadden had offered him a price of grand-child's coffin. Did not say he would get even with Carscadden. Told Henry Hough that if Carscadden had kept his mouth shut he (witness), would not have told all he knew about him.

him in June and asked him to settle his account. John Carscadden corroborated his brother's evidence as to the meeting of respondent and Wager on the street in the earlier part of June.

Henry Hough testified that Wager had said to him that he would "get even" with Carscadden for having given evidence against him in his law suit. Wager also said that Carscadden had offered to throw off the price of two coffins if he would vote for respondent.

The charge was dismissed. "We have heard the evidence and are sorry for it," remarked Justice Osler.

Some More Whiskey.

Charge No. 6 was then considered. It alleged that Edward Richards, Amherst Island, offered a bottle of whiskey to George Beaubien, and that he gave William Beaubien, mail carrier, $1 with which to get a bottle of whiskey for George Beaubien.

George Beaubien, Amherst Island, testified to driving home on election day with Edward Richards. Richards asked witness to get a bottle of liquor and he would pay for it. Did as requested and he was buying and he drank the whiskey. Did not see Richards before voting. Had no reason to expect a bottle of whiskey from Richards.

This charge was also dismissed. Charge No. 12 alleged that R. H. Baker had promised money to Levi Kelly to induce him to vote for T. G. Carscadden.

Levi Kelly, in his evidence, denied that Baker had either offered or promised him money. Had conversed with Baker and asked for a loan of money, but it was refused.

Parkinson, a former witness, told of overhearing a conversation between Kelly and Baker on election day, in which Baker told Kelly to "see him next morning."

Justice Osler said that such an open charge should not have been made. It might result in bringing back all the witnesses to have the charge denied.

Mr. Watson made a further charge a few minutes later, when Charles Pison was called and failed to respond, it being announced that he had gone down town.

Justice Osler said that it was a great pity such a statement should be made. The witness should be in court; it was the duty of the petitioners to see that they were in court.

Mr. Carscadden said that Mr. Watson's charge was an untruth. Mr. Watson waxed warm and asked Mr. Cassels if he intended his remark to be applied personally.

The last charge taken up was No. 3, alleging that R. E. Fowler, Amherst Island, had procured and paid to Alfred Willard $2 to induce him to vote for respondent, Fowler, at the time being an agent of Carscadden.

Willard was the only witness called. He admitted having received $2 from Fowler, but said it was in payment for services rendered and had been made before; it was strange that the facts had not been learned at an earlier period.

At this point Mr. Watson announced that he intended to rest his case upon the evidence already submitted.

Justice Osler looked over the evidence and announced that judgment upon charges Nos. 22, 29, 30, 32, 33 and 34 would be reserved. Some of them would require some close enquiry and thought. He asked if counsel were ready to proceed with the cross-petition.

Mr. AEMOND, for the petitioners, announced that he was not ready. It was not convenient to go ahead at the present sitting. He had been unable to subpoena Mr. Sutherland, the chief organizer, who had been through the constituency, and whose evidence was considered to be important. The whereabouts of Sutherland could not be learned at present. He, therefore, asked for an adjournment.

Mr. Watson stated that if the chief organizer was wanted, Alexander Smith, who held that office, was in court, ready to give evidence.

Justice Osler favored the application for a postponement, as did also Justice Maclellan, who said the court was in Napanee long enough for the present. The cross-petition would be postponed indefinitely, the court being unable to announce a convenient date.

Mr. Armour again pressed for the issuance of four summonses, already asked for, and Justice Osler promised to consider the request; personally he was opposed to issuing them.

The court, therefore, rose shortly after noon and the great trial came to an end. The only of hundreds of witnesses were glad to get away after their week's attendance at court.

The prevailing opinion is that, in view of the nature of the evidence, the sitting member will be confirmed in his seat.

The six charges upon which judgment has been postponed are not considered weighty. The most important are the payment to cab drivers and the payment of what were alleged to be excessive charges by delivery men for rigs used before election day, with a view to obtaining payment for rigs "volunteered" for election day.

Mr. R. J. N. Hogg, Sunderland, Ont., writes— After having suffered for nearly two years with indigestion and severe headaches, and getting no relief from the numerous doctors I consulted I decided to try Burdock Blood Bitters. The steamer Bannockburn has been located on the north shore of Lake Superior, opposite Michipicooten Island. Crew safe.

These words constituted the long-desired news, which was immediately bulletined. It was a great relief to the relatives and friends of the crew, who were overjoyed when they heard the glad tidings.

The Bannockburn must have run about fifty miles off her course to get to the point indicated on the north shore of Lake Superior. The spot is far away from any telegraphic communication and the crew would surely have to wait till they were discovered by searching tugs.
