A FINE TOWN.

TRANSVAAL DISTRICT SEEN THROUGH CANADIAN EYES

"The Garden of the Transvaal," is the Appropriate Name of the Charming Town.

F. J. M. W., one of the Canadian teachers who went to South Africa, writes to The Toronto Star, under date, Potchefstroom, Transvaal, July 19, that, "It occurs to me that while I was still at home in Canada everyone there seemed to know a good deal about Pretoria and Johannesburg and a few other notable places in South Africa, but very little of Potchefstroom, which is a place of considerable importance here, seeing it is the old capital of the Transvaal. The town is appropriately named 'The Garden of the Transvaal,' for nowhere else that we Canadian teachers have been in South Africa have we seen such fine trees, such beautiful gardens, so many pretty streams of water, or such chirping little birds as are to be found here in the Potchefstroom district. We therefore feel inclined to do something with the too sweeping statement of the fact that 'South Africa is a land of birds without song, rivers without water, and women without beauty.' As to the women, if the Dutch women are meant, they may have beauty or they may have not, for it is not so easily discoverable. To us it has been a constant source of wonderment as to whether the cloths which are often worn and cover the greater part of a Dutch woman's face are there to protect pleasant features and a good complexion or to conceal the lack of either.

This town of Potchefstroom is situated on a river which rises in the name of "Mooi," which in English means "pretty" or "beautiful," and the river well deserves its name, winding as it does beneath its overhanging willows to join the Vaal, twenty miles away to the south. During the late war Potchefstroom was alternately occupied and evacuated by the Boers and the British. One day the British troops would enter the town, remain for a day or two, and then continue their march north, by the road past the old mill on the northern boundary of the town. Immediately on receiving news of the departure of the British, the Boers would pour into the town from the north, where the concentration camp now is, and remain until news of another advancing British column would cause another exit of the Boers. Accordingly, as may be supposed, the inhabitants of the town (not the really English people, who had left for Cape Colony), were astonishingly British, or at leastish Dutch, when they suited the occasion. They found it quite easy to cheer for the British one day as to cheer for the Boers the next. Now, of course, all are more British than the British.

Sunday morning, June 8th, last, witnessed the gathering of a large and excited concourse of people in the market square here, when the terms of peace were read out by the chief magistrate to the citizens, who filled the large square before the Court House.

The people here are ambitious for their town and are eagerly looking forward to the day, anticipated as not very far off, when Potchefstroom will once again occupy its old-time position of importance in the Transvaal, as well as one of the three important centres of education, having a High School, a Normal College and a College of Agriculture. The midwinter school holidays are over, and the teachers are back at their duties, after enjoying their ten days' convention at Johannesburg. Regardless of cost, about 700 teachers were gathered together from all parts of South Africa, and entertained during their stay in Johannesburg by the citizens.

Daily lectures on educational and other subjects were given, together with entertainments, concerts, visits to the mines, etc., as well as a reception at "Sunnyside," by Lord Milner. The chief credit for the successful convention is due to Mr. Sargent, who has wisely been entrusted with the guidance of educational affairs in South Africa.

The beneficial results of this great gathering of South African teachers will doubtless be apparent in the work of the schools for years to come.

Measures and Head at Home.

It was only a few choice spirits that asked for the works of Dr. John Beattie Crosier at the Public Library until a few months ago. Why the books were not in general demand before is perhaps not difficult to explain. To the great unwashed "The History of Intellectual Development" or "My Inner Consciousness" does not hold out an invitation so pressing as "The Mystery of the Barnyard" or "The Caddywoman's Revenge." Hence Crosier's books were asked for only by a choice few. We are a curious people, however, and when Dr. Crosier's name was brought before the notice of the public and held there owing to the frequent reference made to him as a Tassie Old Boy, we wanted to see what number of stuff he wrote anyway. Two or three months ago a Crosier book was almost always on tap at the Public Library. To-day, says the librarian, they are always "out," no reader waiting for the other to finish. To many readers the books doubtless prove a delightful surprise for they are not written in the pedantic and cut-and-dried fashion that prevails but in a style that seems liable to make every man his own philosopher.—Galt Reporter.

A certificate of Character.

Biddy Malone was in a great fever of excitement when she landed in Montreal, direct from the "ould country." Her certificate of character was lost on board ship, and what would she be after doing? To her great happiness and consolation, Timmy Mulligan, her Irish friend, volunteered and wrote her the following beautiful recommendation:— This is to certify that Biddy Malone had a good character before she left the "ould country," but lost it on shipboard, comin' over.

SCOTLAND'S SAINT.

What Historians Have to Tell of St. Andrew.

St. Andrew was a native of the Galilean town of Bethsaida and with his brother Peter was a fisherman. He was not only a hearer of John the Baptist, during that prophet's so popular ministry, but became identified with him as a disciple. It was while in the company of his master, that he was directed by him to Jesus, the Lamb of God. The story of his interview with the Saviour is well known and his brotherly action on the following day in finding his brother Simon, and imparting to him the glad news of a Messiah, news that had rejoiced his own heart and made him long to share it with others. St. Andrew in this act has often been compared to a small river steamer, towing out from her moorings into mid-stream a huge ocean-going vessel. Peter became by far the more conspicuous character of the two and appears to have moved in more stirring scenes, but for that first news of the Master, whom afterwards he so devoutly served, Peter was indebted to the quieter Andrew.

Andrew comes before us again in the Gospel story with his suggestion in the presence of the hungry multitude of the presence of a lad, who had five barley loaves and two small fishes, and once again when some heretics—followers of the multitudes of Gentiles, who should yet come into the kingdom—desired to see Jesus; he with Philip led them to the Christ.

The body of the saint is said to have been transported from its resting place at Patrae to Constantinople in 357 A.D., and deposited in a church which Constantine the Great had built to receive the remains. Scotland's claim to a special interest in St. Andrew rests upon the tradition that a certain abbot, Regulus, in 369, A.D., carried from Constantinople to Scotland some relics of the saint, and deposited them in a church, built in St. Andrew's honor, and named after him on the spot where the city of St. Andrew's now stands. The monastery connected with the church became a place of popular resort for pilgrims from many lands, and as early as 800 A.D., was endowed with very great wealth by one of the early kings in thanksgiving for a victory obtained. The history of the church of that historic town, of its part in the early evangelization of Scotland, of the scenes in which it played so large a part at the Reformation, or the great university that has had so conspicuous a place in the educational system of the Scots, all this belongs to another subject, rather than the life and labors of the saint. It is not too much, however, to say that as St. Andrew was, as Bede called him, "The Introdutor to Christ," Scotland has in no small measure emulated the example of her patron saint in playing the part of the pioneer in paths of political, educational and religious reform for the world, and so has opened the way into the kingdom of Christ for the sons of many lands besides her own.

Eczema Cured by Ozone

Mrs. Ellen Smith of Montreal, was a fearful sufferer from eczema for many years. She was tortured so severely at times she contemplated putting an end to her existence. Thanks to Powley's Liquefied Ozone, she did not do so because it cured her completely and for all time. She is a great believer in Ozone now, and so is her pastor, the Rev. J. Frederick Renaud, who has known her for twenty years, and who is quite conversant with her cure by this drugless product. He vouches for the facts in her case and gives Ozone great praise.

MRS. ELLEN SMITH, Montreal.

Mrs. Ellen Smith Writes:

"Having been greatly benefited by Powley's Liquefied Ozone, I feel it my duty to allow it to be known to the public at large. I had been a fearful sufferer from eczema for many years. The disease centered in both limbs, below the knees. The left especially, was swollen to alarming dimensions, while the inflammation, irritation, and hard, scaly condition, induced a degree of suffering which only the mercy of God prevented me from ending in suicide.

"I spent the best of three years on my back, besides different periods in three hospitals. Then at home I could not go as far as the next room without the aid of crutches, and altogether my case was considered past help, for I had had the best skill in the country to no purpose.

"I have now used five bottles of Ozone, and I rejoice to say that both limbs are reduced to their normal size, the burning is entirely gone, and I can walk alone with perfect ease, although I am now sixty years of age.

"The Ozone also cured an advanced stage of liver disorder, and I am willing at all times to tell my experience to other sufferers.

(Signed) MRS. ELLEN SMITH, 31 St. Andre Street, Montreal.

The Rev. J. Frederick Renaud's Corroboration.

"To Whom it May Concern:—I beg to state that I have known Ellen Smith for over twenty years, and for the past nine years she has suffered from a running sore but was unable to obtain any permanent relief until she tried Powley's Liquefied Ozone, to the beneficial effect of which she bears most grateful testimony."

(Signed) REV. J. FREDERICK RENAUD, 82 St. Herbert Street, Montreal, P. Q.

There is no other way of proving the value of a preparation, so valuable, so positive, than by investigating the statements made about it and finding out if the facts are just as they are represented. We always solicit the freest possible investigation of the claims we make for Ozone, and to widen the scope of such an undertaking by you, we suggest that you make enquiries of your druggist. Oftentimes cases come under his notice that he can refer you to. As these cases may not have had our attention, you will get an absolutely unbiased opinion of this great drugless preparation—Powley's Liquefied Ozone.

WHAT IS A LOAD?

Test Case As To What a Man Can Stand.

Indianapolis News.

The question of how many drinks of whiskey a man can stow away and still maintain an equilibrium was indirectly at issue in a case that Judge John H. Baker, of the federal court, tried at Evansville this week. The plaintiff—the man who drank the whiskey—was Edward Murphy, a large landowner and distiller near Owensboro, Ky. The defendant was the city of Rockport.

Murphy travels for his own distillery. About two years ago he made a trip to Rockport, where he met with a serious accident. Rockport is built on hills, and some of the streets are abruptly ended by cliffs. In going to his hotel at night Murphy walked off a precipice. He fell several feet into a ditch, breaking a leg and an arm, and sustaining other injuries.

He began suit for $15,000 damages, but the defence set up the claim that the city was not liable, although it had not guarded the precipice.

Murphy denied being intoxicated, and in his testimony he declared that he could drink forty glasses of whiskey a day and not be affected.

Several saloon men testified that Murphy was not drunk, but was "feeling good." The jury was only out fifteen minutes and found a verdict for the defendant.

When Baby Had Scald Head—When Mother Had Salt Rheum—When Father Had Piles.

Dr. Agnew's Ointment gave the quickest relief and sure cure. These are gems of truth picked from testimony which is given every day to this greatest of healers. It has never been matched in curative qualities in eczema, tetter, piles, etc. 35 cents. For sale by Henry Wade and H. B. Taylor.—103.
