

IS A SERIOUS MATTER.

The Most Serious and Fatal Diseases Arise From Indigestion. Chronic indigestion or dyspepsia, while a very common trouble, has for some time been looked upon by able physicians as a serious thing, and that no time should be lost in treating it properly at the start, because recent researches have shown that the most serious, fatal and incurable diseases have their origin in simple dyspepsia or indigestion.

Diabetes is simply one form of indigestion, the sugar and starch food not being assimilated by the digestive organs. In Bright's disease the albumen is not properly assimilated. While consumption and dyspepsia are twin diseases, and it is beyond question that dyspepsia makes a fertile soil for the seeds of consumption. But the trouble has been to find a remedy that could be depended upon to cure dyspepsia, as it is notoriously obstinate and difficult to cure.

This has been the question which has puzzled physicians and dyspeptics alike, until the question was solved three years ago by the appearance of a new discovery in the medical world known as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which it was claimed was a certain, reliable cure for every form of stomach trouble.

Physicians, however, would not accept such statements without first giving the new remedy many tests and carefully observing results. For three years the remedy has been thoroughly tested in every section of the country and with surprising and satisfactory results. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be honestly claimed to be a specific, a radical lasting cure for indigestion in the various forms of acid dyspepsia or sour stomach, gas or wind on stomach, too much bile, undue fullness or pressure after eating and similar symptoms resulting from disordered digestion.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets were not placed before the public until this year's trial left no doubt as to their value and they have recently been placed in the trade and can be found on sale at all druggists at the nominal price of 50c. per package.

No extravagant claims are made for the remedy, it will not cure rheumatism, pneumonia, typhoid fever nor anything but just what it is claimed to cure and that is every form of stomach trouble. No dieting is necessary, good wholesome food and plenty of it and you may rest assured that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest it, because it gives such universal satisfaction.

A SLICK ONE

Had Worked His Game In Many Places.

FORGER NIPPED.

KINGSTON POLICE EFFECT CLEVER CAPTURE.

Charles H. Carter Tried to Pass a Cheque on D. Couper—His Visit Was Expected and the Police Nabbed Him.

Sergt. Snodden, of the Kingston police, made a clever capture on Saturday evening, by securing no less than the forger, who, during the past two or three months, has been defrauding merchants in Sarnia, London, Brantford, Peterboro, St. Thomas, Belleville, Brockville and other places.

No one told the police that the forger would visit Kingston on Saturday, but somehow the little congregation of blueshirts, at the station house felt in their bones that he was on the way here. During the week Police Detective Aiken had warned all the grocers to look sharp on Saturday for a man who might present cheques and telephone the police station. It was this precaution that resulted in the capture.

On Saturday evening, after five o'clock, a young man with black moustache, face and hands stained, and dressed in a laborer's garb of black shirt, soiled clothes and rough overcoat, entered the grocery store of D. Couper, on Princess street. He purchased articles valued at $1.04, and presented in payment a cheque on the Standard Bank for $10.50, dated Nov. 20th, 1902, stamped with the Rathburn company's stamp and signed by Allan Chadwick, as local manager Mr. Couper acquiesced without a moment's hesitation, and asked him to wait till he went across the street to get it cashed at Carson's. In the latter place, Mr. Couper immediately telephoned to the Rathburns who disputed the cheque, and then to the police station, where Sergt. Snodden was waiting such a message. The latter rushed across the market square, jumped into a delivery wagon he saw, and drove furiously up Brock street. He went past Couper's store, thinking the man might have "got wise" and slipped away, but turned down again. The forger had become a bit suspicious, and was just coming out of the grocery door when the police sergeant nabbed him. The young man was put under arrest, and taken to the police cells.

On the way down he admitted his guilt, and expressed amazement at the quick way in which the police had corralled him.

The cheque presented to Mr. Couper was made out in favor of Joseph Graham, and endorsed upon the back apparently in a workman's handwriting, but any keen-eyed writer could discern on examination that the writing was simply disguised, its regularity being too apparent. Mr. Chadwick was called and, of course, said the cheque was a forgery. The stamp was not that of his company, and his name was written in a too amateur a way. Even the number and date of the cheque were stamped, the scheme of the forger being to throw all chances of suspicion away.

At the police station, the young man gave his name as Charles H. Carter, which, of course, is fictitious, as is also the name of C. Lee, Tpron, under which he registered at the British American Hotel. Carter (let him be called) arrived from the west on Saturday at 3 a.m. There was a police constable awaiting him at the G. T.R. station, but nobody could identify him in his dressy condition. In other places the forger was described from his workman's dress, but was unknown as a young man in stylish clothes, light moustache, and a black Fedora hat, carrying a traveller's valise. He was assigned room No. 16 at the British American. During the day the hotel employees say he made a careful study of the city directory. In the evening, in seclusion, he donned his workman's clothes, daubed his face with brownish stain and dyed his moustache black, the disguise being perfect.

After arriving at the police station with Sergt. Snodden, the forger asked to be allowed to throw off his disguise, under which was his usual street dress. He asked the sergeant, "how it was that his capture was so soon effected, and was told that as he had operated in other places on Saturdays, after the banks had closed, the Kingston police concluded, he would do the same thing here, and he was about time the Limestone City received a visit from him, they had been on the lookout, and none too soon. Carter admitted the astuteness of the local force, stating that in other places he found his work "dead easy." He remarked that he became suspicious after Mr. Couper had been gone a few minutes, and was about to "clear out" when arrested.

In his valise, brought from the hotel, was found a forger's complete outfit, which included rubber stamps, cheques, etc. There were also found several liquids with which the forger stained his face, dyed his moustache and removed his hair. There were about two dozen Standard Bank cheques made out in favor of Joseph Graham, and signed by the Rathburn company. Most of them were for $10.50 and $14.50. A number of blank Montreal Bank cheques were found.

Carter, of course, will not give his right name, but merely stated that he was well connected in the west. He is twenty-eight years of age, and unmarried. Asked as to how he came to be a forger, he said that he was the black sheep of a good family. He did not use liquor, being very temperate, but he ascribed his downfall to keeping company with sportive women of high living. Though he had made over $100 a week for the past three months, he had but $3 in his purse, when arrested. His position of a clerk, he said, did not yield him enough to travel with expensive women, and so he drifted into forgery.

Among his belongings were found some drugs evidently to be used for his nerves, as his occupation certainly demanded a bit of nerve power. A card was also found bearing the name of H. R. Studley.

The forger says his father is dead, but his mother is living, and it is to be seen that he refuses to disclose his identity. He will not inform even his friends, in the hope of getting off lightly, but declares he is willing to take all that he deserves. His first attempt at forgery resulted so successful, and seemed so easy that he went right into the business. His disguise was so perfect that he could present himself ten minutes later in his street dress and people wouldn't know him. In Peterboro, he thought he might be caught when the forgeries were discovered, but when he had changed his clothes and taken the dye off his moustache, he walked through the streets and to the train unrecognized.

Carter said that his closest shave was at Sarnia. He had tried to pass a cheque on a jeweler. The boy went out for change and notified the police. After he had gone a minute or two, Carter says he excused himself nonchalantly, saying he had to go into a store a few dollars beyond, and as his time was limited he would call on the way back and get the change. He went outside, sized up the situation and soon saw the boy and a police officer coming along. He slipped through a half way, removed his disguise, got around to his hotel, and in a half hour, in his travelling costume, he walked down to the wharf, passed beside the officer and the jeweler and crossed over to Detroit.

He says he was fearful lately of being caught, and when in Kingston on Saturday had a presentiment that he was playing his last game.

If he had successfully operated at Mr. Couper's, it was Carter's intention to go next to McKee's. The rough overcoat he wore was purchased at Ellison's second-hand store, where he went in his disguise, so that if he was traced there, the police would be thrown off the scent so far as his real identity was concerned.

At the Police Court. Carter was arraigned for trial at the police court this morning and elected to be tried summarily by the magistrate. To the charge of attempting to utter a forged cheque, he pleaded guilty.

"I will remain you for one week," said Magistrate Farrell, "as I desire to obtain some history of your career."

This announcement did not seem to please Carter, who seemed to be disappointed, and plainly showed his feelings.

Carter looks to be a young man of about twenty-eight or thirty years. Unless appearances are deceiving, Carter has been accustomed to "live by his wits." There is cunning in his narrow-set, blue eyes, and his sharp features, thin lips, drooping at the corners, serve to accentuate this trait. He stands about five feet, ten inches high, is of slight build, weighing probably 135 or 140 pounds. His head leans forward slightly when he walks, giving the appearance of having a slight hump across his shoulders. He has light hair, parted in the middle, and a thin, light colored moustache. His cheek bones are prominent and jaws long and thin; his whole features may be summed up in the one word, "sharp." He wore a black coat with light striped trousers and patent leather boots. There was an air of semi-detachment about the prisoner, who appeared to keep a steady nerve and to observe everything passing. Upon taking a seat in the dock, the court surveyed the magistrate and police, then directed his glance to each face near him.

Weather Report. Dr. Knight, in charge of the local meteorological observatory, reports that the wind storm on Saturday night was unusually severe. The velocity on the coast was forty to fifty miles and in spots fifty miles. The month's report is: Highest temperature, 61; lowest, 13.3; mean daily average, 41.7. Total rain fall, 1.54 inches.

ATTENDED KIRK. SCOTTISH SOCIETIES AT ST ANDREW'S.

The St. Andrew's Sermon Preached by Rev. Mr. Mackie—Highland Cadets Were There in Uniform.

The annual St. Andrew's sermon was preached by Rev. J. Mackie, M. A., chaplain of the Scottish societies, in St. Andrew's church last evening, and the congregation in attendance filled every pew in the Kirk. At 7 o'clock, the Highland Cadets, in kilts, and members of St. Andrew's society and the Sons of Scotland, filed in from the lecture hall to the front pews in the body of the church, while from the organ came the strains of "The Land O' the Leal" and other Scottish airs.

The chaplain wore his hood, his badge of office, and a sprig of heather, which latter the choristers also wore. On either side of the organ were draped two large flags, the Union Jack and the St. Andrew's Cross. The congregational singing was full of vim, the paraphrase, "O God of Bethel," and the psalm, "I French," being sung with special heartiness. The strong quire rendered fine service.

"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I forget not Jerusalem above, my chief joy." (Psalm exxxvii, 5-6). This was the chaplain's text, and his sermon was eloquent, vivid, picturesque and fervently patriotic.

The words of the text, he said, were the heartburst of a true patriot, far from the land of his birth. His heart went back whether his foot self back, and his soul winged its way to the dear old home to the holy city and the priceless blessings of a national faith. The love of country, the preacher said, was as natural as the love of mother. Both are implanted by God in the human breast. Patriotism is the breath of God in man's soul. In a man this may be the only vestige of religion, and a man is not sunk low who loves his country with a true love, for in that there is piety.

No land is there, declared the chaplain, where love of country is so manifested as in Scotland. The Spaniards are noted for politeness; the Portuguese for hatred of treachery; the Russians for high ambition, and the Turks for sloth and sensuality—but patriotism is the pre-eminently national characteristic of the Scotch. And is it not the voice of the Scottish heart that is in the text?

Mr. Mackie dealt with the causes of the Scottish patriotism which he attributed to the smallness of the country, its beauty and its sacredness, for it was a holy land, crimsoned with the blood of its best, shed for civil and religious liberty. Abroad, the St. Andrew's and Sons of Scotland societies far from the heathen land of their birth. As to the question of raised why the Scotch did not remain in their own land, the chaplain pointed out how marvellous was the Scottish influence for good all over the world.

Wherever the Scotchman went, he did not lose his nationality, and he did not lose his country, and he did not lose his God. He was a Scotchman, a Canadian, a citizen, and a son of God. He was a Scotchman, a Canadian, a citizen, and a son of God. He was a Scotchman, a Canadian, a citizen, and a son of God.

After the service, the Scottish societies met and passed a vote of thanks to the chaplain for his able and interesting discourse, and to the church authorities.

Banquet And Greeting. Alderman J. B. Walkem will be the mayor's representative at St. Andrew's banquet to-night. The latter is away on business.

John McIntyre, K.C., had not missed a St. Andrew's sermon for the past thirty years, until last night, when he had to confess that he was a speaker at the prohibition meeting in Sydenham street Methodist church. However, he proudly wore a sprig of heather in honor of the day.

The leather to be worn by St. Andrew's banqueters to-night is from the vicinity of Edinburgh, Scotland. Among the greetings received were: From St. Thomas—"Here's to ye, May the hinges of friendship never rust." From Cornwall—"Fraternal greetings, Blithe and merry be ye."

From Toronto—"Good will on earth to men this day, be Scotia's prayer." Philadelphia St. Andrew's Society, organized in 1749, sent warm greetings, and a wish for a bonnie night in wrestling with the haggis and "spirits."

Winnipeg's message was the most humorous. It touched on prohibition, and ran thus: "The premier province of the dominion greets you a' to-night with fraternal greetings. We are a lookin' at ye, Mak some o' guid weel donal the night. Ye might hae t'rough for'ter the fifth. A braw night to ye an' plenty o' haggis."

How They View It. Joseph Wilson, secretary of the Masons' Bricklayers and Plasterers' union, favors compulsory arbitration, and disapproves of voluntary arbitration. W. A. James, president Tailors' union, opposes compulsory and favors voluntary arbitration. J. Flanagan, ex-president Journeymen Bakers' union, favors other methods, while W. Tweed, president of Painters' and Decorators' union, favors voluntary arbitration alone.

Saw-Off Complete. The Addington election petition was dismissed with costs at Napimere. Herrington said he could find no traces of corrupt acts on the part of Mr. Avery or agents.

AT THE RALLIES TWO LARGE PROHIBITION MEETINGS HELD.

The City Hall Crowded in the Afternoon—Four Prominent Citizens Spoke at The Evening Meeting in Sydenham Street Church.

The last of series of Sunday temperance meetings took place yesterday. In the afternoon a large rally was held in the City Hall, which was filled to the door with women and children. On the platform were the members of the children's chorus, which sang temperance songs very heartily and cleverly. John McIntyre, K.C., presided, and in a concise address explained the provisions of the liquor act. Rev. Thomas Brown, B.D., a very earnest and a very ready speaker, expatiated on the emotional side of the question at issue. He declared that the prohibitionists had the boys and girls on their side. Rev. John Boyd, secretary of the local prohibition committee, appealed to the women and children present to go home and persuade the voters there to vote for prohibition on Thursday and to vote early. The last speaker was Abraham Shaw, who called upon each lover of his country to wipe out the liquor traffic.

Simultaneously an overflow meeting was held in Ontario hall. There the Salvation Army Band contributed appropriate music. The audience, which about half filled the hall, included only a few women. Rev. John Boyd was the first speaker. Rev. Alexander Laird spoke of the evil effects of the traffic, and Robert Meek emphasized many reasons why prohibition should be carried.

The Evening Rally. In the evening a temperance rally was held in Sydenham street Methodist church, where Rev. Dr. Philp presided. The edifice was well filled. The preliminary exercises possessed considerable longevity, so that it was eight o'clock before J. R. Black, the first speaker, was introduced. In introducing him the pastor entered a protest "in the name of the now-sainted Principal Grant" against the statement that he in any way wished to bolster up the liquor trade; on the contrary, he hurled all his power against the present license system.

Mr. Black spoke of the benefits of the campaign, which was partly a political and partly a social campaign. The people, he held, might have to pay more taxes if prohibition was carried, but they would be more able to do it. For the sake of their children many men would vote for the liquor act of 1902.

Mr. A. Calvin, M.P., declared that when Dr. Philp asked him to speak he had answered with an emphatic "No." Therefore, he was much surprised to see himself advertised as one of the speakers. "The only reason I can think of for this action," he said, "is that clergymen are so fond of airing their own opinions from the pulpit when there is no chance of contradiction that they cannot understand why anyone else should mix their opinions in to do so." He told of his own native village—Garden Island—where liquor had never been sold within his recollection but where men were not prohibited from having it in their own homes. There had never been any charge there for crime or drunkenness.

Mrs. Kerr and Arthur Craig sang a trio, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," with much acceptance in Queen street Methodist church last evening.

Leont. Hens-Groves, of the 4th Hussars, has applied to the militia department for leave of absence to enable him to attend the school of cavalry in Toronto next month.

Harry Baker, Alvington avenue, has gone to Pittsburg, Pa., to take the special students' course in the Westinghouse Electric works, the largest plant of its kind in the world.

Chimneys On Fire. About six o'clock on Saturday evening the fire brigade was called to a house on Bagin street, owned by Joseph Anderson and occupied by Mr. Kerr, where a burning chimney was giving trouble. A couple of hours later they were again called out, a chimney on the residence of Mr. Turkington, Patrick street, having caught fire. The blaze was soon extinguished. No damage was done in either case.

Chief Elmer requests that the citizens get their chimneys cleaned out. The brigade has been called out many times of late because dirty chimneys have caught fire. He wishes also that, whenever possible, such alarms be sent out, leaving the rest of the department at liberty and in readiness to answer to the call should a more serious fire break out in some other portion of the city. No doubt citizens will make an effort to comply with the chief's reasonable request.
