GREAT HEIGHT Where Men and Beasts Soon Died AN EXPEDITION TO REACH L'HASSA, THE CAPITAL OF THIBET.

The Sufferings of the Party Was Intense—Jcy Gales Blew in Their Faces—Finding Valuable Manuscripts Over 1600 Years Old. London, Dec. 8.—M. Sven Hedin, the well-known explorer, who recently attempted to reach L'Hassa, the capital of Thibet, gives a vivid narration of his sufferings on the journey from Charkik to L'Adakh, which occupied eight months. He lost nearly the whole of his caravan, owing to the travelling at enormous altitudes; even the valleys were higher than the summit of Monte Blanc. The mere act of breathing was most difficult. Four members of the expedition died simply because they could not breathe the rarified air. Two died gradually from their feet upward, retaining their senses to the end, the brain being the last attacked. Jcy gales blew in the faces of the party all the way. The animals suffered terribly. Forty-four of forty-five horses and six of sixty-nine camels died. The explorers said that around Lobnor, which is a dried-up lake, there was no sign of life of any kind. He found ruined temples, and houses with high towers in four villages, a few miles apart. Among the ruins were found cartwheels, iron axes, clay jars and Chinese manuscripts, which it can be proved are 1,600 years old.

Mahan, of the United States navy, has been elected honorary member of the London Royal United Service Institution for life, in acknowledgment of his valuable contributions to the literature of the British navy. Lord Charles Beresford has, it is said, written a special report on the building and working of German Atlantic liners with particular reference to their engine power, speed and adaptability as cruisers. Lord Beresford holds the opinion that the vessels furnish lessons which British lines might do well to learn. The speech delivered by the German emperor to a deputation of workmen in Breslau, largely occupies the attention of Berlin public and press. It seems to be taken as the Kaiser's wish that an imperial labor party shall be constituted, which will be true to the traditions of the monarchy, and at the same time represent the interests of labor.

DIVORCED FROM PRISONER. Accused His Wife of Deserting Him for Another. San Francisco, Dec. 5.—Welcome A. Botkin has secured a divorce for desertion from Mrs. Cordelia Botkin. The case is noteworthy, as Mrs. Botkin is condemned to prison for life for causing the death of Mrs. John Dunning and her sister, of Dover, Del., by sending them poisoned candy from San Francisco through the mails. Mrs. Botkin made no defence. Botkin testified that his wife left him in 1896. One of the causes, Botkin says, was John P. Dunning then a correspondent here, with whom she was enamored. He said she poisoned the candy with the idea that Dunning would then return to her. When she sent the poisoned candy, Dunning was writing her daily letters from Cuba, where he was acting as correspondent, and at the same time corresponding with his wife.

From these cases $6,101.50 was collected, though the expense of enforcing the provisions of the act was very high. The amount of money derived by the town from this source is $250, which comes from police court fees. In some cases the same persons were compelled to pay $50 fines several times.

To Make Enquiry. London, Dec. 8.—It is said that Premier Balfour will appoint a Royal commission to inquire into the subject of municipal trading. The success of municipal trading is certain of the large municipalities is encouraging the smaller bodies to embark upon undertakings for which they are hardly financially strong enough. This condition of things has led to a strong demand for an impartial investigation into the probabilities of the future, and into the security that ought to be exacted on behalf of the ratepayers.

The American woman fought for her rights, but yesterday Judge Laughlin decided that the foreign widow was the rightful successor to the property and awarded it all to her.

HOT ATTACK Made Upon a Set of Raiders.

ESIDES SOME THIRTY IN THE HOSPITAL. Villagers Attempt to Chastise Horse Thieves, But Are Punished With Telling Effect—An Episode in Russia. London, Dec. 8.—An extraordinary affray took place a few days ago at Lopatchevo, a popular village in the government of Kioff, Russia. This place has latterly earned an evil reputation as harboring a band of cattle and horse thieves, who systematically raided the cattle of the village and hamlets in the adjoining district. The local police took little notice of the complaints, and the matter of chastisement in their own hands. They organized an overwhelming attack upon Lopatchevo, which they approached in three columns from various points. There were no fire-arms among the attacking parties, but they were well equipped with stout cudgels. The one who had, however, received warning, and were prepared for the onslaught, which was delivered with desperate vigor.

The conflict lasted a couple of hours, when the attacking party had to retire, leaving five of their number behind beaten to death. The defenders lost three killed, making eight fatalities altogether. There are thirty-three of the combatants in hospital, many of them injured for life. 'Twas by years, so soon as the dark nights of autumn begin, a veritable plague of horse-stealing breaks out in the rural districts of Russia. There seems to be no means of checking this evil, which is now at its very zenith.

MUSE'S NEST IN HER HAT. A Many Stockinged Commotion in a Car.

Newark, Dec. 8.—A woman who thought she would wear her last winter's hat just one more season caused reactions the other day in a Clinton avenue trolley car. Before starting down town for her shopping she went to the attic and dragged out the old hat and put it on without a close inspection. Then she boarded the car, in which there was nothing left but standing room. All the passengers except Sergt. Brown, of the Fourth ward police, and a small boy, were women. And of course they all spotted the new comer's hat and knew its vintage at a glance. "She's a parlor trick lady," suddenly exclaimed the small boy to his mother. "She can move her bonnet without shaking her head." The bonnet was surely vabbling a little and there was also an uncanny upward movement. The boy's mother called the attention of her neighbor to the moving hat, and the word passed down the line of seat, so everybody was more or less prepared when the real calamity came. That was when the passenger, suspected of being a parlor trick lady, felt someone thing herself and began to wriggle. A moment later she shrieked and then she threw last winter's hat on the floor of the car, thereby releasing five small, but very lively mice that had been born in the hat and might have been raised in it if the women hadn't tried to make it do for two winters. There were twenty women in the car, and no two of them wore the same color or design in stockings, as Sergt. Brown discovered when they all jumped upon the seats and began to scream. He had had a mind to call out the reserves, but the car was going too fast to get help then, so the sergeant fell to alone to slaughter the four of the beasts on the floor of the car and caught the fifth as it was shaken down on a seat, from an elevation to which it had climbed, and despatched it with his club. The woman who had caused the excitement left the car at the next corner and was last seen going into a millinery store.

POLICEMAN SHOT GIRL. She Wore Male Garb and Resisted Arrest. Kingston, N.Y., Dec. 8.—Eva Henderson, nineteen years old, was shot in the leg by a policeman while she was trying to escape arrest. She was dressed in man's clothes. The policeman was engaged to wed for a man who was detailed to watch for a mysterious woman in black or man, who had been terrifying women and children at night by prowling around houses and trying door knobs and windows. The policeman arrested Miss Henderson, who said she had been having fun frightening neighbors. The girl broke away from her captor twice, and the second time he shot, the bullet striking her in the leg.

RIGHTS OF ENGAGED GIRLS. Not Chattels of Those to Whom Pledged. Toledo, O., Dec. 8.—Charles White, of this city, was engaged to be married to a girl named Manie Bosley. White is jealous, and when he saw her walking on the street with Henry Valentine he attacked Valentine and the light that followed was bloody. Then Valentine had White arrested on a peace warrant. Judge Templeton heard the case and placed White under bonds. He said: "It is an engagement, of course, should be held sacred, but just the same the lady has the right to accept the attentions of other men. In this case Miss Bosley evidently permitted Valentine to pay his attentions to her. White should have talked the matter over with her, before remonstrating with Valentine."

STRUCK AND KILLED. A Lamentable Accident at Grimsby Station. Grimsby, Ont., Dec. 8.—Miss Maud Hughes, aged about twenty-three, Miss Gertrude Hainer, aged about nineteen, and Harry Brady, aged about twenty, all belonging to Grimsby, were killed on the public crossing at Grimsby station last night, by the Toronto express train which passed at 8:35 p.m. The young people were in company on their way home from church, and on reaching the track were stopped by a freight train running east.
