NOBLE TRIBUTE

PAID TO MEMORY OF PRIN-CIPAL GRANT

By Dr. Moore, of Brockville-As He Lived, So He Died-He Bowed Alone to Death. At Queen's medical dinner on Thursday night, Dr. Moore, of Brockville, paid this tribute to the late Principal

He was a great man, an orator, a statesman, a distinguished citizen, who, in the zenith of his fame and power reached his journey's end. He earned and held a proud position in the public thought. He stood for absolute integrity and his name was known and honored by thousands of his fellowmen. He knew that men were only fragments; that the greatese walk in shadow, and that faults

> He was an orator, earnest, logical intense, and picturesque from the cor ner-stone of statement to the doomed conclusion. He satisfied the eye; the audience was his. He had that inde finable thing called presence, tall, commanding, erect, ample, in speech graceful in compliment and metaphor and his sentences measured and rhythmic, fell like music on the en raptured throng. He wore no mask He walked a highway of his own and kept the company of his self-respect He believed in the royalty of men in the sovereignty of the citizen, and in the matchless greatness of thi fair Canada. I have many times thought that our forefathers were educated by nature, and I am still of that belief, that they grew grand as the continent which they inhabited; that the great rivers, the splendid lakes, the lonely forests, sublime mountains the introspective silent plain, stole in upon them and became part of their nature and they grew great as the country in which they lived. This seems to me to apply perfectly to our late principal, George Munro Grant, who, with our beloved chancellor, tra velled from ocean to ocean across this vast continent, and gave to the promoters of the great Canadian Pacific railway such information as led them to construct this transcontinental highway, the finest in the world.

Touched by the pathos of all human life, knowing the shadows that fall on every heart—the thorns in every path, the sight, the sorrows, and the tears that lie between a mother's arms and death's embrace, he knew that all the streams, no matter how they wander, turn and curve amid the hills or rocks, or linger in the lakes and pools, must sometime reach the ea. These views enlarged his soul made him patient with the world, and while the wintry snows of age were falling on his head, spring, with all her wealth of bloom, was in his heart. And as he lived he died. Proudly he entered the darkness, or the dawn that we call death.
