Practical Forestry. Washington, Dec. 22.-The farmers of this country own about 500,000,000 acres of woodland, ten times the acreage of all federal forest reserves. Most of it consists of small wood lots from which the owners derive timber supplies for farm purposes. The bureau of forestry several years ago undertook to furnish to them, without cost, the services of its foresters. The offer proved popular, and applications for assistance have far exceeded the ability of the bureau to answer them. Two experts have been employed in north and south, who have examined and put under management several thousand acres of woodland. Usually only one visit to the farm by the bureau's expert is necessary, and this service is given without cost to the owner. When, as occasionally happens, a second visit is needed, the owner is required to pay the travelling and living expenses of the expert while
