QUITE UNEASY.

OVER THE PROBABLE LONG DELAY.

The Matter Should be Quickly Decided — British Papers Unable to See Where the Matter Will Finally End.

Berlin, Jan. 6.—There is an uneasy feeling in official circles, to-day, regarding the duration of the discussion of the Venezuelan dispute before The Hague tribunal. A prominent official speaking of the dispute, to-day, said: "A long delay would not be tolerated, Germany's claims are clear enough for presentation before any tribunal to-morrow. The government here would feel most sore if an award should not be given within three months."

London, Jan. 6.—The majority of the papers, to-day, re-open the discussion of the Venezuelan muddle. There is a general uneasiness regarding the dispute, the papers expressing themselves as unable to see where it will all end.

PITTSBURG PUBLICITIES.

A School Trouble and a Post Office Stir.

Point Road, Jan. 6.—John Quinn, of the middle road, has purchased the old Morton farm from the McCollum estate, and is improving it rapidly. The house has been rebuilt, barns enlarged and the once fine, but abandoned, stone schoolhouse becomes useful as an implement shed.

There has been a stir among the ratepayers of No. 2 section. It is a union school, yet for a great many years a Roman Catholic teacher has been engaged. The old trustees, John Baxter and Thomas Hamilton, are Protestants, and gave the teacher of last year, a young man, notice to leave. He was not qualified under the law, and they feared trouble. The Roman Catholic ratepayers got it into their heads that a Protestant teacher was likely to be engaged, so they rallied at the annual election, and John Baxter being the retiring trustee they voted him out by a majority of two, electing Patrick Fowler. Miss Draper, of Glenburnie, was appointed teacher, and for several days a conflict was expected at the opening of the school on Monday morning, when the old teacher threatened to take charge of the pupils. But he wisely changed his mind, and all is peace for a time. Separate schools and double cost are likely to put an eventful quietus to the feeling engendered.

The post mastership at Barriefield has been conferred upon Miles Byrne, whose tavern and store are centrally located opposite the old office. There is a stout outcry, however, against the placing of a post office in a store of that class, and the government and its Pittsburg advisers come in for a lot of censure. A change of some kind must occur.

PLAYING WITH DEATH.

Testing an Electrician's Safety Dress of Wire Gauze.

From Engineering.

Experiments have been made with Prof. Artemieff's safety dress, in the high tension laboratory of Messrs. Siemens and Halska. This dress is constructed entirely of fine but thickly woven wire gauze. It completely encloses the wearer, inclusive of hands, feet, and head. Its total weight is 3.3 pounds, its resistance from hand to hand, 0.017 ohms, and its capacity varies from .0002 yp to .00025 microfarads, according as the wearer is far away from or near to a wall. The cooling surface is so great that a current of 200 amperes can pass through the dress for some seconds, from hand to hand without perceptible heating effect. Standing uninsulated on the ground, and clad with this dress, Prof. Artemieff drew sparks from the secondary terminals of a transformer which was giving a tension of 75,000 volts, the period being fifty cycles per second. He next seized the main, and later on, the potential being raised to 150,000 volts, he drew sparks from both terminals, and handled the latter. The machine supplying this transformer was of 170-kilowatt capacity. In concluding the experiments, the inventor short-circuited the generator by clutching hold of the terminals, the potential difference between the two being 1,200 amperes. The circuit was broken by simply letting go of one electrode. Throughout these experiments Prof. Artemieff declated he felt not the slightest sensation of any current through his body.

NEED NOT KISS THE BIBLE.

Reason Why Perjury Has Greatly Increased.

Baltimore Sun.

The repeal of the law requiring witnesses to kiss the Bible has been followed in New Jersey by a marked increase in perjury, and a movement, it is said, may be started to restore the custom. Prosecutor William J. Crossley, of Mercer county, in which Trenton is situated, is quoted as saying that, "since the solemn practice of kissing the Bible has been eliminated, from the oath, witnesses in criminal trials recklessly prevaricate." This is due, he says, to the fact that "the witnesses in criminal trials usually are from a class that is not given to truth telling, except when in fear of eternal damnation of the soul or in dread of thirty days jail for being caught lying. Many of this class of witnesses were awed by the old form of oath, which included the kissing of the Bible."

Mr. Crossley does not hesitate to attribute the failure of justice in two important criminal cases to the fact that the moral influence of the Bible upon witnesses was lacking. The criminologists, adds Mr. Crossley, who appeared before the legislature, said that, when a criminal intended committing perjury, "he usually avoided kissing the Bible by declaring he had conscientious scruples." He would then raise his right hand and affirm to tell 'the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth,' in the issue joined between the state of New Jersey vs. Peter Jones, defendant. The witness knew he was committing statutory perjury, of course, for which he could, and probably would, be punished if caught. But the criminal argued that he was not 'goin' again' th' Bible, any sort of story and took the chances of being tripped up by the state."

Thus it would appear that, while this reform may have contributed to physical hygiene, it has not, in New Jersey, at least, if Prosecutor Crossley isn't prevaricating himself, contributed to moral health.

The Modest Lady.

When we see hell spelt in some newspapers with a hyphen, as for instance, "heaven and h-l," one is strongly reminded of the New England prude who wrapped the legs of the table in napkins, because, naked, they looked immodest.—Beaumont Journal.

When the word hell is used so extensively by the ministers from the pulpit, we see no harm in using it in public prints. Speaking of the New England prude, reminds us that the same lady made a trip to Texas years ago, over the M. K. & T. railway. Just before entering the Indian territory, the conductor announced to the tourists that in a few minutes they would see the beautiful Cherokee Strip. The lady blushed, pulled down the window curtains and began reading, while every man on board leaned way out of the windows.—Current Issue.

China Wedding.

Charleston, Jan. 5.—The cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Slack was the scene of a pleasant gathering on Monday, December 29th, when about sixty invited guests assembled to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of their marriage. At five o'clock the happy company sat down to a table well laden with oysters and other good things. The evening was spent in music, dancing, games, etc. The company broke up past midnight, expressing the wish that they might return in five years to celebrate their silver wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Slack received many presents of china, both useful and ornamental.

Our teacher, Miss Eyre, gave a charming school concert the last day of school which consisted of songs, recitations and dialogues. A recitation, "The Shipwreck," by the teacher, is worthy of mention. A tree well-laden with toys, cards, candy and popcorn was the centre of attraction for the little folks. At the close the pupils presented their teacher with a very handsome china [illegible] of the room. Mrs. Slack, quite ill, is better. Miss Nellie Hudson, very ill, is convalescent. D. Johnson and daughters, Lansdowne, were recent visitors.

A Strange Proceeding.

The most remarkable incident which occurred throughout yesterday's campaign is reported from No. 11 subdivision, Frontenac ward. B. W. Folger entered the booth to vote for his choice of aldermen. The deputy returning officer refused to give Mr. Folger a ballot, unless he prescribed to some oath. Not one of the scrutineers present offered any objection to Mr. Folger, whose name was properly entered on the rolls as entitled to vote. The deputy returning officer refused to state his objection to Mr. Folger, and would not accept a tendered ballot. The poll was blocked for upwards of ten minutes while the matter was being argued.

BEESWAX MINING.

Controversy Over Origin of Deposits—Indian Legends.

Los Angeles Times.

Mining for beeswax is an industry confined to a small stretch of the Pacific coast, and it exists nowhere else as far as can be ascertained. About thirty miles south of the mouth of the Columbia River is Nehalem Bay and beach, and here is where the beeswax mines are found. It is hardly proper to call the deposits mines, for they are scattered along the beach, in an uncertain fashion, and are probably not of nature's production. The deposits are mined, however, but in a manner unlike any other kind of mining. They resemble placer diggings more than any other.

The beeswax miner uses a plow and team of horses to work the alluvial deposits at the mouth of the bay, and sometimes goes at it with pick and shovel. Occasionally some fine specimens of the wax are found floating or cast upon the sands of the beach.

How did the beeswax get there? Authorities differ as to this. Samples have been sent to men who claim to be mineral experts, and they say that it is probably ozocerite, otherwise known as mineral wax or natural paraffine. The paraffine made from petroleum products is not much different from that produced from beeswax, gives a similar odor when melting and it is easy to see that a mistake might be made. On the other hand, beeswax experts insist that it is the product of the bee, the characteristic odor disappearing somewhat from long exposure to the elements. When found, the pieces have a corroded appearance like mineral ore, and the discoloration extends through the substance to some extent. This might be expected, for much of it has been tossed about by the waves by two or three centuries.

The alluvial or made lands near the entrance to the bay have trees standing thereon which must be more than a hundred years old, some being three feet in diameter, and deposits of the wax are found beneath the roots of these trees in many instances. At present the sea is making inroads in the land and is cutting away the support from quite a track of low land covered with forest, and large quantities of the wax are brought to view. The Nehalem River is a large stream, carrying an immense amount of water in the winter season, and is constantly changing the country in the region of the delta. Sometimes the old channel is shut up and a new one is made into the sea. The large bar at the mouth of the bay is shifting, and as the changes take place more of the wax is unearthed, so that miners are not always obliged to depend upon the shovel or plow.

Wedding At Vennachar.

The residence of George W. Sweetnam, of Vennachar, was the scene of a very happy gathering of nearly sixty guests, on the afternoon of New Year's day, when his youngest daughter, Emma May, was united in marriage to Samuel A. Buffam, eldest son of Samuel Buffam, of Vennachar. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Hugh McLean, of Matawatchin. The bride was becomingly attired in white, while the bridesmaid, Miss Sarah Buffam, sister of the happy groom, wore a blue dress trimmed with white. Edward Johnson, of Miller, acted as groomsman. After the ceremony and the offerings of hearty congratulations to the newly married couple, a sumptuous wedding supper was partaken of, and the remainder of the afternoon and evening was spent in pleasant conversation, music, and the enjoyment of games. The numerous costly and useful presents received by the bride, who for some time has acted as postmistress of Vennachar, were proof of the high esteem in which she is held by her many friends. Her father presented her with a beautiful organ. The other presents included valuable souvenirs from intimate friends. Absent and present, sets of silverware, two very handsome bedroom suites, several magnificent table sets of fancy glassware, china, and more ordinary crockery, beautiful vases and flower pots, a number of fancy lamps, framed pictures, mirrors, table cutlery, fancy napkins, doylies, and diverse fancy and household articles, too numerous to mention. The many friends of the happy couple unite in wishing them a long, prosperous and happy life.
