JIM BALLARD RELATES HIS STORY OF KINGSTON PENITENTIARY.

Experiences of One of the Orangeville Incendiaries in the Cells-Story of Solitary Confinement-Says He Became Contented and Resigned With a 12-Year Sentence to Serve-500 Convicts There.

Jim Ballard, one of the Melancthon incendiaries, has returned to Orangeville from the penitentiary. He was sent to Kingston in 1897 to serve a term of twelve years. The intercession of friends secured his release. With Jim Ballard was his brother Dave, Alonzo Smith, James Corbett and William Reid. Several of the gang escaped by turning Queen's evidence. Ballard is a stal wart negro, with a generous quantity of white blood in his veins. The ex-convict talked freely of his experiences in prison and gives a graphic description of the worst features of. convict life. He says, however, that he feels more vigorous and better satisfied than at any time before being confined. Jim declares that he and his companions were filled with horror when informed of their sentences. They did not expect to live through their terms, yet they soon became actually contented. Imprisonment he did not find such a terrible thing. He was placed in the stonecutting department at once. Now he is a master stonemason and expects to follow the work for a living. The other convicts in this gang have learned useful trades. Dave Ballard ent of schools. She received 31,342 is a carpenter, Smith a blacksmith and Reid is employed on the prison farm. The man appears to feel no bitterness toward the prison officials or the officers of the law who were instrumental in sending him to the cells. The big negro manifests a good deal of resentment toward the members of the gang who escaped punishment by revealing the plans of the crooks to rob insurance companies. He is puzzled to understand how they escaped serving terms in prison. When this was explained to

"I see, I see!" as the fact dawned upon him, "but I could never understand it before. And that's the reward of those gents for all their swearing against me and the rest of us. Well, well! I suppose it's not worth bothering about now.' Jim Ballard says the penitentiary is about the loneliest spot on earth There are about 500 men confined there, many of them criminals of the hardest type, thugs, thieves, forgers, perjurers and murderers. The num-lows did, he can get along very well and time passes speedily enough. Solitary confinement for insubordination appears to be terrible pun ishment, for Jim says he has seen men at the end of it coming forth scarcely able to walk. During their confinement in the dark cells prisoners are in complete darkness, their only fare is a little bread and water and they have to sleep on the bare stone floor. Neither Jim nor any of his fellows, however, ever suffered this extreme punishment, which often includes the lash and sometimes sus-

The convict's wife has married since he was imprisoned. He declares that he would not take her back for all the gold that twelve draught horses could pull. He had "suspicions on her" before he was convicted. This phase of the negro's life seemed to found happiness with her new hus hand, "even if he is but 24, while his wife is 48," explained the huge negro, with a grin that showed his white teeth and wide expanse of blue gums, for Jim is, in the parlance of the street, a "blue-gummed nigger." There is a tradition that a person bitten by a nigger with blue gums cannot recover. This is so firmly with blue gums is feared to an amazing degree by those of his own race. , See assesses sances accesses see see see see see see see Jim Ballard is going to the States to begin life over again, and he seems quite cheerful. Many of the citizens shook hands with the negro and praised him for the philosophical way he views the future as well
